Rosh Hashana 5757

The management and staff of The Jerusalem Post wish their readers and the entire House of Israel a year of health, peace and happiness. Shana Tova.

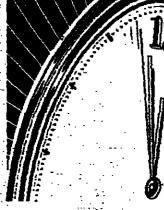

Rosh Hashana begins tonight

HAIM SHAPIRO and BILL HUTMAN

IT might seem as if everyone is going away for the holidays, but the overwhelming majority of laraelis will be at home during Rosh Hashana, the beginning of the Hebrew year, which begins tonight and continues through Sunday.

According to a survey conducted by the Teleseker research institute, 51 percent of Israelis intend to spend the holiday in their own (Continued on Page 20)

IDF watching Syrian troop movements

THE Syrian army has continued with its Lebanese mountains. Lebanese security unusual troop movements in Lebanon and Syria, and the IDF is closely watching the redeployment because it is unlike anything it has seen for a long time.

Reports from Lebanon said Syrian troops had pulled out of several positions in and around Beirut which they have occupied for years. Syria has about 30,000 troops in Lebanon.

Last month, Syrian troops withdrew from a number of positions in the central sources said it was a defensive move. following perceived threats that Israel was going to attack.

IDF intelligence analysts do not believe the redeployment indicates a dramatic change in Syrian assessment or that it is preparing an attack.

Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu told The Jerusalem Post yesterday that Syria would be making "a grave mistake" if it decides to go to war.

ARIEH O'SULLIVAN and news agencies

"I think Syria has an interest in peace and stability as much as we do, and I think any such action on the part of Syria would be precipitous and unwise and certainly not in the interest of Syria and certainly not in the interest of peace." Netanyahu said.

There were reports that planes believed to be Israeli flew over south Lebanon, Beirut and Baalbek in eastern Lebanon yesterday, breaking the sound barrier in some areas. No air raids were reported.

Reuter reported that half a dozen trucks piled high with Syrian soldiers, bedding and furniture moved north along the seafront Corniche promenade in west Beirut. A large tent encampment, one of the most visible symbols of Syria's military presence in Beirut since 1987, was gone, Reuter said, as well as two other In the past few days, Syrian troops have abandoned a number of other sites, including their positions near the presi-dential palace at Baabda. But despite the pullouts, Syrian troops are still stationed in Beirut and its suburbs, and are highly visible in some areas.

According to the London-based newsletter Foreign Report, Syrian army engineers are also reported to be working "feverishly" to build combat positions in (Continued on Page 20)

"Not being a mother hurts more than being father to a child whom you are not sure at the minute whether you want or not," the 42year-old woman said. "The pain of the absence is greater than that of the presence ... What [my husband) did to me was, in a sense, to take from me the thing that was most important to me."

"Ruti is a wonderful woman," added her beaming lawyer, Ziv Gruber, as she was enthusiastically hugged by a young niece. "She deserves to be a mother, and children deserve to be born to a mother like this."

Ruti and Danny Nahmani made legal history for the first time in 1988, when they embarked on a right to have her eggs fertilized in vitro with his sperm and then implanted in a surrogate mother in the US. Ruti was unable to bear children herself. In 1992, however - after the eggs had been fertilized, but before they were delivered to the surrogate -Danny left Ruti and moved in with another woman, with whom he has since had a child. He then told Ruti he no longer wanted a child by her, and denied Assuta Hospital permission to release the Ruti filed suit in Haifa District Court, which ruled in her favor, and Danny then appealed to the Supreme Court. His appeal was supported by Attorney-General (Continued on Page 20)

Mubarak: Summit to convene as scheduled

CAIRO - Egypt will convene the regional economic summit in November despite earlier threats to cancel it to force Israel into concessions, President Hosni Mubarak said vesterday.

But Mubarak urged Israel to end the stalemate in negotiations with the Palestinians, Lebanon and Syria as a sign of good will.

Mubarak also said that Egypt would sign a global nuclear test ban treaty approved by the United Nations if Israel signed it too.

"We'll sign when Israel signs," Mubarak told reporters after meeting members of his cabinet. With regard to the economic summit, he said: "We are determined to have the meeting held here because we and the United States have vested interests in convening it." Egypt had sought to push peace talks forward by threatening to can-cel the Middle East and North Africa Economic Conference, scheduled for November 12-14 in

It would be the third such meeting following summits in Morocco and Jordan.

"What is required from both Israel and the United States is to help us to make the conference a success, otherwise the meeting will fail," said Mubarak.

Egyptian opposition newspapers reported Wednesday that the US had put intense pressure on Egypt to hold the summit.

Both Egypt and Israel voted in favor of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty at the United Nations on Tuesday, despite Cairo's reservations that the treaty should include provisions for nuclear disarmament by the five declared nuclear states, the United States, Russia, Britain, France and China.

Egypt has also for years been pushing Israel to sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, saying Israel's alleged nuclear arsenal gave it an unfair regional advantage.

Egyptian officials have said they would press at next week's annual meeting of the International Atomic Energy Agency for studies and workshops on its proposal to declare the Middle East a zone free Mubarak, meanwhile, urged Iraq to implement UN resolutions on getting rid of its weapons of mass destructions to avoid further confrontations with the US. But he did not mention the current US-Iraqi standoff.

Foreign Minister David Levy addresses Foreign Ministry workers in Jerusalem yesterday, during a reception to mark the New Year.

PM: We'll try to boost WZO settlement budget

THE government will make World Zionist Organization's settlement department - which funds projects in Judea, Samaria, Gaza and the Golan - to its 1992 levels, Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu promised last week in a letter which was disclosed yesterday.

The promise was made in a letter to Jordan Valley Regional Council head David Levy, who had raised the issue with Netanyahu.

The department funds several projects - from agriculture to tourism - to promote the economic development of the settlements and is therefore a "very important" part of the effort to bring more people to live in these regions, Levy said. If there are jobs available, he said, the settlements become a more attractive place.

"As part of the effort to correct "every effort" to restore the budget the injustices created [by the previous government] and to restore the situation to what it was, in preparing the 1997 budget, the Treasury will make every effort - by moving funds [from other budgetary items] - to make the settlement department's budget equal, in real terms, to what it was in 1992," Netanyahu wrote. This promise, if kept, would result in a significant increase to the unit's budget. The Jordan Valley, for instance, is getting NIS 22 million from the department this year, but if the budget were raised to 1992 levels, the figure would be NIS 44m. in 1997, Levy said. The increase in other parts of the territories would be similar.

Overall, Levy said, the division's budget is some NIS 70m. less this year than it was in 1992.

Syria refuses to negotiate until Netanyahu accepts unofficial deals HILLEL KUTTLER and news agencies

SYRIA said yesterday it would not agree to fresh talks with Israel until Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu accepted all the understandings it reached with the previous government.

The Syrian position was spelled out in its official press after the US said it had formulated with Israel roposals for renewing peace talks with Damascus.

Netanyahu is ready to negotiate without committing himself to withdrawal from the Golan. The previous agreements and understandings do not bind his government. He doesn't want to resume the talks from the point where they stopped but from the zero point," the official daily al-Thawra newspaper said. Syria will never be dragged into such traps. No force could ever push Syria to what it doesn't want and to what contradicts its national rights and the land-for-peace principle,"

However, the Administration does not consider any assurances Israel may have given Syria about a pullout on the Golan Heights to be binding.

"There's a very great difference between what has occurred in the Israel-Palestinian track versus the Israel-Syria track," Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said.

The Clinton Administration will probably not know before next week whether its efforts to restart Israeli-Syrian negotiations are succeeding, a senior US official said yesterday.

Talks this week with Netanyahu and his advisor Dore Gold were productive, but additional contacts with Syria are necessary to ascertain whether the formula to restart the talks is workable, he said. the newspaper said.

Additionally, there is a possibility that the US' peace process team headed by special Middle East coordinator Dennis Ross, may not even pursue the Syrian track when it visits the region next week, he said. The visit may instead deal with the Israeli-Palestinian talks and with the November regional economic conference in Cairo, he added. That is due to the US' understanding of the limits of Israeli diplomatic traffic, he said. The Israeli-Palestinian focus is at the moment more urgent," he The Syria track will again take a back seat in Israel, he said, because of "a combination of the new government's approach to the [Syrian] negotiations, its wariness of being locked into past patterns, combined with the reality that no Israeli government can make judg-ments on more than one track. The domestic effects of this [Palestinian] situation are so volatile, you have to handle it very carefully."

The official was confident that the US would succeed in finding a "middle ground" to getting the sides back to the Wye talks in Maryland, despite their divergent public positions on the fate of the Golan Heights.

"I don't know if we can do it in the next [few] months before the [US] election," he said.

"But does it matter whether you resume before or after November? The question is how to recreate the atmosphere in which the Israelis and the Syrians are thinking of how to resolve problems, not cre-

The road is designed for the Israeli population and defense forces only. The Palestinian population has other roads at its disposal," the IDF Spokesman said.

Mustafa Natshe, the mayor of Hebron, whose residents would be among those likely to use the new road, said he was astonished by the regulation and called it "apartheid on the roads."

"The roads are built on confiscated Arab land and we cannot use them? This is unjust and we shall protest," Natshe said.

Military sources denied this was part of a separation process. "It is purely for security. Israelis can use any roads they want except when Palestinians towns are declared closed military areas," he said. Few Palestinians have tried to use the road, opened last week, because under the closure relatively few have permits to travel to Jerusalem. The road, featuring two numels and a bridge, has no exits between Gush Etzion and the capital.

Some workers who have permits to enter Jerusalem said they tried to use the road and were stopped at the Gush Etzion checkpoint. The complained that using the road would save them time and gasoline

The new road is the only route from the West Bank into Jerusalem that does not have a checkpoint at the entrance to the city. Military sources said the IDF did not want to add yet another checkpoint at the entrance to Jerusalem and preferred that Palestinians pass through the fixed checkpoint on the road that leads to Bethlehem.

The absence of a checkpoint on the new road, which cuts travel time to Gush Etzion by half, also removes a psychological barrier, making Gush Etzion, 11 kilometers across the Green Line, feel more like a suburb of Jerusalem. Natshe himself was stopped for 20 minutes at the Gush Etzion checkpoint last week. Only after he called the IDF governor of Hebron did he receive special permission to proceed. He did not know at the time that there was a general ban on its use

Kahalani and Police Inspector Assaf Hefetz made their statements at the makeshift police command center located temporarily at Eshta'ol Forest, near Beit Shemesh, from where the Jerusalem Police District is overseeing searches in the area.

The Central Police District established another command post near Kamei Yosef. Police, soldiers and volunteers there were given pictures of Edri and a description of the clothes he was wearing when he was last seen.

Edri's fate has grasped the nation's attention, in light of similar incidents when it has turned out that missing soldiers were kidnapped by terrorists, although there are no concrete signs that indicate that this is the case in this incident.

Hundreds of volunteers - ranging from a group of Beduin trackers from the Galilee to drug addicts from a rehabilitation clinic took part in the search. Together with policemen and soldiers, more than 1,000 people took part in the effort to locate Edri, or any signs he had been in the area.

Two police helicopters carrying special heat detection devices for locating persons, and a light plane used by Israel Radio for traffic reporting, also belped out. "The outpouring of help was unbelievable," one police officer one that has come here," said

Sigal Edri, the missing soldier's sister. Family members said they remained firm in their belief that Sharon had not gone missing of his own will. Police, however, were less sure about the circumstances, and said they were continuing to investigate the possibility that a dispute between Edri and his Nahal unit commander may have led Edri to do something unexpected.

Police called on the public to continue to help in the search and to report this morning to the command post at Eshta'ol Forest. Anyone who believes he has any knowledge of the soldier's whereabouts is requested to call the Beit

Hundreds search for soldier Sharon Edri yesterday.

Police are planning to cut back the massive ground search for Edri this afternoon, if they don't come up with anything before then, senior police sources indicated yesterday evening.

In the past, terror groups somebefore announcing they have kidnapped a soldier," one police source said. "Maybe they are simply waiting to give us a bad surprise right before the holiday." Col. Mahmoud Dahlan, head of Palestinian Authority's Preventive Security Service in Gaza, said the Palestinian security services are following the case, but have no information indicating territories.

Supreme Court reverses itself, rules right to be a parent outweighs right not to be one

IN March 1995, the Supreme Court ruled 4-1 that the right not to be a parent outweighed the right to be a parent. Yesterday, in a precedent-setting 7-4 decision, it reversed itself. The right to be a parent, the majority justices said, takes precedence over the right not to be one.

"In balancing [the Nahmanis'] conflicting interests, we must remember that despite the symmetrical language - 'to be a parent' and 'not to be a parent' - these interests are not equal," wrote Justice Zvi Tal, the lone dissenter in the original decision, in yesterday's majori-ty ruling. "The interest in parentbood is a basic and existential value, both for the individual and for society as a whole. In contrast, there is no intrinsic value to the absence of parenthood."

Therefore, he said, there is no societal interest in allowing a man to withdraw his consent, once given, while there is a societal interest in making artificial insemination a viable alternative - which it would not be if a woman knew her partner could veto the pregnancy even after she had been through the difficult and invasive procedure. Danny's consent, the fact that Run acted on this consent, and her reasonable expectation that this consent was sufficient to allow her to have the baby, all combine to prohibit Danny from being able retroactively to change his mind, wrote Tal, who was joined by Dalia Dorner, Gavriel Bach, Eliezer Goldberg, Eliahu Mazza, Ya'acov

Kedmi and Ya'akov Terkel. Bach, in a concurring opinion, said this argument is especially compelling because Ruti could have tried to get a sperm donation from someone else, but did not because she relied on Danny's promise. Now, it is too late: She is medically unable to produce more eggs."Today, nobody is trying to force [Danny] to do anything, Bach added. "He is being deprived only of the right to prevent Ruti from using her eggs, fertilized by his seed with his full consent,"

Tal also stressed that the natural course of events would be for the baby to be born, and the court had no right to artificially halt this process. If, for instance, a woman got pregnant by telling her partner she was not, no one would say the woman should be forced to abort just because the man had not agreed to be made a parent. And finally, giving one side veto power over continuation of the procedure would give that party too much power over his partner, he added.

Domer, in her concurrence, drew on abortion law to support her conclusion that once fertilization has occurred, the balance of rights changes, and the right to parenthood takes precedence.

For the majority, a key factor in the decision was that it would lead to more just results. Goldberg, supported by several other justices, said there was no way to resolve the dispute at all through "conventional" legal tools, as the case was entirely in the "emotional-moralsocial-philosophic domain."

"Therefore, we must search for another alternative, based on one of the fundamental values that dominate our legal system," Goldberg said. "An appropriate fundamental value is justice." Even Domer, who believed the issue could be resolved through existing legal tools, stressed the importance of justice. Terkel, who also thought the decision was largely moral or philosophic rather than legal, took an especially strong pro-life stand. Kedmi took a different approach. The fertilization of the eggs, he said, creates a new entity composed of genetic material from both parents. This is a "done deed" which cannot be reversed; thus, the right of the parent who wishes to continue the process now outweighs the right of the parent who wishes to stop it, since the latter would not only be destroying his own seed, but the other partner's as well.

On one point, the majority justices were united, however. That they would have reached the same conclusion even had it been Danny who wanted to use the eggs and Ruti who wanted them destroyed. Since the baby will be carried by a surrogate, the issue of a woman's rights over her own body is not relevant, they said. The only relevant issue is the supremacy of the right to have children over the right not to be a parent. Justices Aharon Barak, Tova

Strasberg-Cohen, and Yitzhak retired Dov Levine, constituted the Religious leaders praise decision

RELIGIOUS personalities said yesterday that they "welcomed" the Supreme Court's decision allowing Ruti Nahmani to enter a surrogate motherhood agreement and attempt to become a mother.

"The [Nahmanis'] mutual commitment was no less of a commitment than any other contract. [It was made] knowingly, willingly, in full agreement and due to a joint effort to become parents. Danny's abandonment of the family unit should not be able to destroy [Ruti's] basic right to become a mother," Chief Rabbi Yisrael Lau said.

"From this [decision] we also see how important the sanctity of life is - that the court took pity even on a fertilized egg ... and gave Ruti perhaps her last chance to be a mother," he continued. How much more important [this principle is] when we are talking about an embryo ... Surely in this case we must insist on the right to parenthood, to motherhood."

Rabbi Dr. Mordechai Halperin, gynecologist and head of the Schlesinger Institute for Jewish Medical Ethics at Jerusalem's Shaare Zedek Hospital, said it was "difficult to be happy" about such a painful subject, but that he welcomed the ruling. "In medical ethics, logic usually overcomes the emotional aspect of a ques-tion," he said. "But in this case, emotion took precedence, and the terrible injustice done to her has been rectified."

Halperin explained that when the Nahmanis intended to become parents. Ruti exposed herself to majority in the original decision dissented from the new verdict. Theodor Orr was the only new justice on the case to join them.

Strasberg-Cohen, who wrote the main dissenting opinion, reiterated that in most Western countries, the husband's consent is required at every stage of an in vitro fertilization. This is because the right not become a parent against one's will - a right derived from the fundamental principle of personal auton-pain and physical danger for the in-vitro fertilization process. Now, granted the chance for motherhood, this injustice was being righted.

Halperin, who was part of the public commission that prepared the Surrogate Motherhood Law, pointed out that the only Supreme Court justice to rule in Ruti's favor a few months ago was the court's single Orthodox judge. Zvi Tal. Four others, including Court President Justice Aharon Barak, voted against her.

"It turns out that the minority is now the majority," he said.

He also praised the media for having a beneficial influence on the outcome. The fact that there is an appeal process, he added, will encourage judges to try even harder to do justice.

The Health Ministry said vesterday since the new law was passed earlier this year, four formal requests for surrogacy arrangements have been filed with its special coordinator. None of them has yet been approved, as they are being examined on a case-by-case basis. An additional 70 couples are in the process of applying for a surrogate.

Asked whether Nahmani, as a woman in the process of being divorced, could apply for an Israeli surrogate mother to undergo implantation of the embryos, a ministry spokesman said the special ministry committee that deals with surrogacy arrangements will have to decide. Evelyn Gordon contributed to this report.

And while a person does have the right to be a parent, she concluded, no one has the right to force someone else to be a parent.

Furthermore, said Strasberg-Cohen, Danny undoubtedly did not intend his initial consent to remain in force if the marriage broke up, and Ruti should have realized this. Therefore, he should not be forced to keep what was essentially a conditional promise now that the condition - their continued marriage omy - is so important, she said. no longer exists, she wrote.

IN his Rosh Hashana message, President Ezer Weizman warned against extremist behavior and called on the nation to exercise tolerance, seek reconciliation, and respect the opinions of others.

"In this past year, there was one horrendous and shocking event which cast its shadow over all others - the assassination of premier Yitzhak Rabin, of blessed memory, Weizman said. "On the threshold of the new year, at this time of soulsearching and repentance, we have to learn the lessons of this painful experience and what was unearthed in its wake - so that it should not, heaven forbid, be repeated." But Weizman cautioned that there are again worrisome manifestations. "To our regret, following the first period of shock when verbal violence was toned down and the public debate became more tolerant, relations between the different sectors of the nation - religious and secular, left and right - have once again worsened, and violence in the polit-

The Syrian-brokered accord last week, under which Hizbullah and its Shi'ite rival Amal agreed to run on a joint list in south Lebanon, also guaranteed Hizbullah seats from the final round of Lebanon's five-stage elections in the Bekaa Valley on Sunday.

With the elections effectively out of the way, and due to internal pressure on Hizbullah to prove it is not just a political party, the organization announced yesterday with its wave of attacks that it is back in action.

'Fox of Damascus' still rules in Lebanon

DAVID RUDGE

ANYONE who harbored even the faintest belief that the second general elections in Lebanon since the agreements that ended the bloody civil war would be free and democratic should have known better.

Syria, in a masterful piece of manipulation, has ensured that the outcome was exactly what it wanted - even though the final round of the five-stage nationwide bal-lot, in the Bekaa Valley, is still to

In the previous rounds in the north, Beirut, and Mount Lebanon regions, pro-Syrian candidates, on carefully prepared lists, swept the board. Christian opposition leaders, who might have been able to make a noise had they been elected to the 128-seat Lebanese parliament, were left virtually voteless and certainly voiceless.

The "Fox of Damascus," Syrian President Hafez Assad, unsettled

by a resurgence of Islamic fundamentalism of the Sunni variety in his own country, also ensured that Sunnis in Lebanon were kept on Assad is believed to have backed Lebanese Prime Minister Rafik Hariri's criticism of Hizbullah. It is highly unlikely that Hariri would have dared raise the level of rhetoric against the organization without the support of the Syrians.

The results of the elections in Beirut and Mount Lebanon also speak volumes in this respect. Hizbullah failed to retain the two seats - one from each of these regions - which it won in the 1992 elections.

When it came to the fourth round of the elections in south

Lebanon, however, the curbing of Hizbullah suddenly ceased. The stick was replaced by the carrot, because Syria still needs a strong but compliant Hizbullah, particurunning on its own, and possibly winning more votes than its more moderate Shi'ite rival, the pro-Syrian Amal, led by Lebanese parliament speaker Nabih Berri. Berri had earlier allied himself larly in this area. Furthermore,

Assad could not risk Hizbullah with Hariri in the elections in Beirut and joined in the latter's verbal attacks on Hizbullah. The stage was set for a potential showdown between the Shi'ite rivals - a situation which could have re-ignited passions and internecine fighting. Such a situa-tion might have suited Israel, but was certainly not in Syria's interests. So, a prearranged Syrian compromise was offered, and grudgingly accepted by the two and an agreement was reached that Amal and Hizbullah would run on i joint ticket.

This accord, together with an agreement over Hizbullah's list for the Bekan Valley elections to be held on Sunday, effectively give the organization around the same number of seats it won in 1992.

It defused a potentially explosive situation by allowing Hizbullah to retain its legitimacy in the Lebanese political arena. even though the organization was virtually railroaded into accepting the agreement. This in turn leaves Hizbullah in a position to continue its hostile activities against IDF and South Lebanese Army forces, within the limitations of what it knows Syria would find accept-

Assad has clearly shown that Syria can, if it so desires, curb Hizbullah and any other groups operating in or from Lebanon.

Furthermore, the election results underline his adamant stance that any deal regarding Lebanon will have to be negotiated with Syria, and Assad has his own agenda in peace talks - with the return of all the Golan and receipt of US aid topping the list, and Lebanon at the bottom.

Police kill fugitive who ran TA roadblock

THE Justice Ministry's Police Investigations division is looking into the killing of an escaped prisoner, Ziv Barda, by a policeman yesterday morning, after Barda refused to stop for a standard roadblock in Tel Aviv. Following a kilometer-long chase through the streets of south Tel Aviv, Barda, 27, of Bat Yam, was shot by one or two policemen, after he tried to run them over, ignored red lights and tried to run the police van off the road, the policemen said.

"The victim had every reason not to stop for the police roadblock." Hayarkon police chief Dep.-Cmdr. Ya'acov Shoval said yesterday. "He had a long criminal record for scores of offenses, mainly relating to stolen property. He had also been banned from driving and had failed to return to prison around two months ago after a Barda was positively identified several hours after his death by his fingerprints.

The incident occurred just after 5 a.m. while Barda was driving a vehicle which belongs to a man who runs an unofficial center for wayward teenagers and drug addicts in the Neve Tzedek area. On Kaufmann Street, just opposite the city's Dolphinarium, he noticed a routine police roadblock, slowed down and then sped off, according to police. Shoval said that after a preliminary inquiry and speaking to the policemen involved, he is convinced that Barda tried to run them over. The two patrolmen then got into their van and a chase began. A few minutes later, after, according to police, Barda had driven through red lights and attempted to run the Barda had been serving a four-and-a-half-year term for fraud charges and was a known drug addict. He was due for release in January 1997. In July. he received a 48-hour furlough and failed to return. Prisons Service spokesman Moshe Malul said.

As in all cases in which someone is killed by police, the case has been transferred to the Justice Ministry's police investigations division, which will determine if shooting by the police was justified.

Slight drop in terror fatalities

The number of Israelis killed in terror attacks declined slightly in the third full year since mutual recognition between Israel and the PLO on September 9, 1993, Peace Watch reported yesterday. It said 75 Israelis were killed in terror attacks between September 9. 1995, and September 8, 1996, compared with 83 during that period in 1994-95. Of these victims, 60 died in five suicide attacks between February 25 and March 4.

Dieticians offer advice on how not to gain weight during the holidays

IT'S possible to enjoy the upcoming holidays without gaining weight, according to the Israel Dieticians Association, which on the eve of Rosh Hashana issued guidelines for doing so.

If you are cooking the meals, eat a low-calorie but satisfying meal consisting of salads before starting to cook so that you don't overdo the tasting in the process. Experts say you don't have to forgo traditional foods, but cut down the amount of fat, and broil or bake rather than fry them. You may sample every course, but it's best to eat only a little of each.

Between meals, eat lots of low-calorie salads and cheese to reduce your appetite for the heavy meals. Make a list of the days in September and October that are not holidays, and on those dates prepare low-calorie meals to make up for the holiday feasts.

The dieticians suggest eating chicken, turkey or low-fat meat fillers rather than internal organs and fairy meats. If you are invited to a meal, sit close to low-calorie salads. Avoid high-calorie foods such as humous and tehina and pita. Choose red wine over other alcoholic beverages. Avoid chocolates and cakes if possible. Drink low- or no-calorie beverages instead of fruit juices (155 calories a glass).

If you do gain weight during the holidays, dieticians warn against drastic diets afterwards. Consult with a clinical dietician for advice on how to lose weight

Meanwhile, Magen David Adom will boost its firstaid and ambulance staff for Rosh Hashana. Additional ambulances will be stationed near main highways to assist vacationers.

End to innocence

ITTLE more than a year short of two epochal anniversaries - a century since the First Zionist Congress at Basel and 50 years since the founding of the state - Israel finds itself seemingly bereft of the sense of purpose and triumph those landmark dates should evoke.

The Jewish year 5756 was one of the starkest in Israel's history, despite a vigorous economy, an absence of war, and a peace process that is still afloat, however low in the water.

The feeling of delegitimization felt by a sizable portion of the population under the previous government, and the suicide bombings of February and March, would, in any normal 12month period, be enough to mark it as a year best left behind. But the assassination of prime minister Yitzhak Rabin at the hands of a fellow Jew made 5756 tragically unforgettable. Despite protests to the contrary, the assassin was not a lone gunman acting out some personal fantasy. He was willed into existence by a fanatic strain that has developed on the extreme margins of Israeli society.

The phalanx of security men that now surround the country's leaders, and that are even required to guard the president of the Supreme Court in the face of death threats, suggests that Israel has turned a corner and left innocence behind. Mainstream Israel is separated by a chasm not only from the extremist nationalist fringe but from the sizable, and politically powerful, haredi community, as has again been demonstrated by the dispute over Shabbat traffic on Jerusalem's Rehov Bar-Ilan and the debate over the validity of High Court of Justice rulings. Furthermore, the results of this year's should not be passed up.

Knesset elections exposed a fragmentation of society along ethnic lines that has not been overcome by half a century of nationhood.

The mainstream itself appears rudderless in a post-ideological age.

The shocking speed in which the shirking of army reserve duty has achieved social acceptance has rightly become a subject of major national concern. The kibbutz movement, once the dynamo of the Zionist movement, is asking itself existential questions and getting confused replies. Even the national religious movement, the most purposeful of all mainstream elements, has become somewhat subdued in the wake of the Rabin assassination by someone who grew up in its ranks.

But despite the erosion in Israel's sense of self, the national fiber remains essentially intact. The transfer of political power, the ultimate test of democracy, was effected in exemplary fashion despite the bairsbreadth Likud victory and the bitter undercurrents of the campaign. The vigor of the high-tech sector testifies to the country's exciting economic potential. Even politically, the difference between Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's vision of a settlement with the Palestinians and Labor's vision - unlike their difference over Syria - is not a difference in kind, but in measure.

The days between Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur are, according to Jewish tradition, a time for introspection, soul-searching and atonement. The opportunity this period gives all sectors of society to reflect upon the ties that bind and the all too real danger of fraternal hate,

Russian maturity

THE partial transfer of power this week by Russian President Boris Yeltsin to Prime Minister Viktor Chemomyrdin is a sign of how far Russia has come. Last Thursday, Yeltsin admitted - finally - that he has serious health problems, and was to have a heart operation at the end of the month. The choice, he said, was between having the operation and "working passively."Yeltsin said he had no alternative: Passivity, for him, was not an option.

What was most newsworthy was the acknowledgement of a need for such an operation. Yeltsin's health has long been an issue, and two heart "ailments" last year in July and October put the Russian leader in the hospital and inaccessible for weeks at a time. Nobody would say whether the ailments were heart attacks or something less severe, but rumors persisted.

The matter became a campaign issue in the spring, when the public did not see Yeltsin for days and reports were widespread that he was seriously incapacitated. In a throwback to the Communist years, Yeltsin's aides said only that he was exhausted from all his travels and campaigning and was resting. An occasional public appearance was enough to keep at bay the rumors that he was dead, but the questions remained. Yeltsin presumably felt that to reveal such a "weakness" at that time could cause an anxious electorate to panic and vote for his Communist opponent. Gennady

Now, having won the July 3 runoff election, the 65-year-old Yeltsin faces a different problem: If his health does not improve after the operation, who will be his successor? Three potential heirs are already staking out politicalpositions: Chernomyrdin, national security adviser Alexander Lebed, and Moscow Mayor Yuri Luzhkov. Chernomyrdin, who under the Russian constitution would take over as acting president until new elections are held within three months, is someone Yeltsin can trust. The Russian premier seems to have learned the lessons of last year when Yeltsin was last hopitalized. Then, Chernomyrdin announced that he was in control of the key "power" ministries, only to later back down from this statement after pressure from his government rivals. On Tuesday, Chemomyrdin proved his loyalty to Yeltsin by saying that he didn't see himself as acting president. "For me, this means that he will remain president, even during the operation and during the entire course of medical treatment," he said.

And so, while the political struggle continues in the Kremlin, it seems an orderly transfer of power has been established with Yeltsin's blessing. All that is left now is to wish Yeltsin good luck, a speedy recovery and the hope that he is back at his desk soon.

ODD COUPLES Sir, - A few days before his article "Generations and other gaps" appeared in The Jerusalem Post of August 30, Abba Eban spoke on Israel Radio of the "odd couples" which had got together to discuss making peace. In Post article, he again mentions the various "odd couples" - De Klerk and Mandela, the IRA and the British, the presidents of Bosnia, Croatia and Serbia, and Arafat and Rabin-Peres.

Unfortunately, Mr. Eban, who often reminds us of his tremendous memory, forgot to mention the meetings of other "odd couples" -Stalin and Hitler before World War II and, worst of all, Hitler and Chamberlain who met to declare 'peace in our time." Oh yes, the Japanese were meeting with the Americans just before the attack on Pearl Harbor. History is replete with "odd couples" and broken promises. Wasn't Saddam Hussein negotiating with Kuwait just before he invaded that country? One wonders in what generation limbo Mr. Eban is living, for his memories and analogies are very selective. What a disappointment Mr. Eban has become to those of us who, at one time, looked up to him to plead Israel's cause among the nations. Now he pleads the cause of Arafat, who has no intention of making a true peace with Israel. How often does Arafat have to shout "jihad," quote the peace of Mohammed, lie to us and to the gullible international community before Mr. Eban will realize the truth that there are "odd couples" which seek true peace and there are "odd couples" where one partner is treacherous?

THE calendar has turned to a new page, but the topics of public debate are the same

Last Rosh Hashana Eve, Israelis were in two minds over the issue of Hebron in the framework of negotiations on Oslo 2; nothing has changed.

At the beginning of the year we were haggling with the Syrians over resumption of the peace talks. Israel demanded that they continue in the format of meetings between army officers, as agreed in the previous round; the Syrians refused. Now the Syrians are making resumption of the talks conditional on Israel's government endorsing all the proposals put forward by the previous one during its convoluted bargaining. The new government, desiring to turn over a new negotiating leaf, has refused to accept the Syrian con-

Assad thinks he can continue his hostile activities against Israel and take his own sweet time over an agreement because he assumes that Israeli offers, once made, will always be on the table. He also believes he can keep up the pressure on Israel without putting his past achievements at risk.

This mindset, in a nutshell, is what has halted the talks. It seems the Syrians have learned nothing MOSHE ZAK from their own history. In 1947 they - and all the Arab states - rejected the UN Partition Plan, even though Israel was willing to accept it despite the narrow borders the country was allocated under its terms.

The fact that Rabin didn't inform Peres of the proposed concession and didn't express his willingness for total withdrawal in the form of any written document

The story of the US 'non-paper' to Rabin should make Netanyahu think twice

In the years that followed they failed in every attempt to use diplomacy to push Israel back to the borders of the Partition Plan. But Israel's agreement to accept the 1947 borders was no longer

After the Six Day War Israel informed the US that it was prepared to sign a peace treaty with Syria on the basis of the international border. This offer, like a corresponding one to Egypt, was based on a particular military situation: a defeated Syrian army.

But Syria rejected this generous Israeli proposal. It joined the Khartoum declaration of no to peace, no to recognition and no to negotiations, and so Israel withdrew its proposal.

INTERNATIONAL agreements are hard to abrogate, and the Netanyahu government would be in an embarrassing position had Assad gone along with Yitzhak Rabin's acquiescence to the US

Were he still alive he would surely explain that his had been a tactical move, made only to test Assad's position.

In the event we are left with only Peres's version, and he says he was surprised when President Clinton, arriving here for Rabin's funeral, asked him if his government would fulfill Rabin's commitment to total withdrawal from the Golan, as expressed in the American "non-paper."

Sophisticated 'non-decisions

ALLAN E. SHAPIRO

When it comes to the controversy over the role of the High Court of Justice, this is the only sensible option. The public has no stomach for a constitutional revolution against the rule

But neither will it digest a constitutional revolution on the political impact of the judiciary when it comes to issues that really matter. It was unseemly of Prime Minister Netanyahu to suggest limiting the powers of the court only days after spokesmen both for the government and for the opposition, representing a solid

Knesset majority, had condemned the haredi attack on the court and on its president, Justice Aharon Constitutional principles, it has been said, are like the animals in Noah's ark - they come in pairs. The issue, Netanyahu claimed, wasn't the authority of the court. but rather the separation of powers.

This explanation satisfied no one. Before Netanyahu attempts to draw lines, either limiting the powers of the High Court or defining the separation of powers, he must recognize a basic limitation.

As in Eastern Europe, from which our political culture is largely derived, there is no clear line separating constitutional politics and ordinary politics. In the most contentious areas, there is no sharp distinction between the rules of the game and its content. Thus drawing lines is a risky

*13, 1996 The Ja

In theory, the government had two options. One was to declare that it wasn't formally committed to the implementation of Oslo (but this, though not ruled out by international law, was hardly feasible taking political and diplomatic realities into

The second option for the government was to see itself as bound by the agreements in principle, but implementing them very differently from the headlong rush that characterized the previous government's dealings with the Palestinians.

An important point: If in the future Yasser Arafat and the PA were again to commit or even to tolerate large-scale violations of their undertakings under the agreements, as they have clearly done in the past, the Netanyahu government would be fully justified in responding in an appropri-ate fashion, diplomatically and

The debate over whether, at the time, the peace process with the Palestinians could have been advanced without resuscitating Arafat is now largely academic; but if after the meeting at Erez some Labor and Meretz leaders declared that Netanyahu owed them an apology, well, surely the shoe is on the other peace process altogether, that he would create a disastrous crisis in our relationship with the US, that he didn't know how to talk to our Arab interlocutors, etc. etc.

In fact, Netanyahu is doing exactly what he set out to do: to continue the peace process, fulfill the previous government's legal obligations, and - if need be meet with Arafat. After all, most of the electorate wanted the peace train to move forward; they leagues have changed their attitude toward Israel and Zionism. As Saddam Hussein has just reminded us, the "New Middle East" is still far off.

With some exceptions, all its negative features are, unfortunately, still very much in evidence: violence and brutality, a lack of democracy, the neglect of basic human rights, a disregard of treaties and agreements, and, last but not least, the tendency of some leaders in the region to change positions and policies

Today's really cogent questions

aren't to do with the past, but with what Israel and the Palestinians can hope to achieve

Binyamin Netanyahu made it plain to Arafat that the Palestinians stand a very good chance of attaining most of their realistic aspirations - "realistic" being the key word - but not everything they thought they would get from the previous govemment

Their alternative? To squander everything they've already achieved and risk losing out altogether. For instance, solving the Hebron conundrum is important, but the issue will have to be settled in a way that addresses Israel's security and historical considerations without diminishing Palestinian self-administra-

But there is a challenge that is much more important in the long run; and that is to find a formula that will enable the Palestinians to govern them-selves - whether as part of a "de jure" peace treaty or as part of an agreed de facto situation, acknowledging Israel's overall prerogative in matters of security and recognizing full Israeli control in the areas vital to Israel's security.

One may assume that these areas would include all or most of Area C, though there could perhaps be trade-offs in the future between areas C and B, the latter today under joint Israel-Palestinian control.

Some termed the Netanyahu-Arafat meeting a "historic" event. It would be much closer to the truth to describe it as a practical step on the way to achieving peace with security just as Netanyahu indicated all

A matter of lost and found

AKING advantage of my acquaintance with an archeologist, I visited the site of the recently dedicated portion of the Western Wall excavations.

We stood at the entrance of one of the almost dozen stores which lined, on both sides, the street leading from the Dung Gate to the area of the Damascus Gate.

My friend bent down, scratched a bit with his tool, and out of the dirt in between the stones pulled forth three small coms. After he had rubbed them on his trousers to remove the stuck-on dirt, a Greek inscription and a date palm became visible.

Almost 2,000 years earlier, in the decades prior to the Roman conquest and the destruction of the Temple, a Jewish shopkeeper dropped these coins, or his customer dropped his change, after the purchase of a small sacrificial bird, perhaps. There, in the shadow of the Temple Mount walls, under a huge stairway leading some 20 meters up to the entrance of the Temple courtyard the coins lay in the dirt between two stones at the doorway. And now two other Jews, one from Russia and another from the US, both living in Israel after leaving the Diaspora - created when the Temple was destroyed and Jewish political independence ended - had completed the cycle. What had been lost, was found.

Looking about, one could visualize the stairway being dismantled by the conquering Roman legionnaires. One could almost sense the bruising impact of the huge stones as they came crashing down. The street is broken up where the mighty weight struck the pavement and caused it to cave in. Other stones, whole or shattered by the fall, are piled up where they fell.

YISRAEL MEDAD

The walls of the stores and little shops are just crumpled remains, while the Herodian Temple Mount support wall behind remains solid. The pavement actually possesses a certain familiarity. A manhole cover and even a drainage opening is visible.

A column bearing Latin markings was found - nothing extraorfrom the 1960s on fought an ideological war with Zionism from far-off Tunis and Lebanon, waging a propaganda campaign that negated the Jewish connection with Israel, now face the challenge of proving their own connection to Eretz-Yisrael/Palestine.

The Arabs claim Arab roots that were never here as found. But no matter how you interpret history, it never really lies. Dig after dig, find after find, this country becomes more and more Jewish. The coins, the pottery shards, the walls, the weapons - all confirm what our tradition teaches: that there is an unbroken connection between the Jewish people and this land.

Just as I was coming out of my hut a woman who had lived in our neighborhood back home came up and wished me a Happy New Year. I noted that even in the filthy rags she wore, and lacking either hair or shoes, she still managed to look impressive. She wasn't Jewish and could have stayed safely at home, but she had refused to be separated from her Jewish husband and son.

She spoke to me about the future, saying she hoped the war would soon end. Then she asked when the Day of Atonement was, because she wanted to fast with us as a sign of solidarity. I never saw her again. Anne, a woman of Jewish Slovak origin, was deputy to the Blockaelteste, the prisoner in charge of the hut. We called her "Anntie Anne" because she looked so very, very old. She was actually around 35.

Later that afternoon she produced - from where? - two candles, and placed them on the brick heating charmel that ran lengthwise down the hut and was activated only in the bitterest cold.

This channel served a multitude of purposes; a few weeks earlier my friend had given birth on it. We watched as this old-young woman lit the candles. The scene was heartrending. Each prisoner was locked in her own thoughts

Later it grew quite dark and we heard shouting and the footsteps of kapos as they ran from hut to hut. They were telling those in charge that a strict curfew would

The doors at both ends of our hut were locked; no one could go in or out. An electric feeling pervaded the air, and I knew it wouldn't be long before we got our New Year's gift.

SUDDENLY in the hush came the roar of trucks and motorcycles, the yelling of orders and the noise of dogs barking. Tense in our hut, we held our breath.

It was the Nazis' Rosh Hashana gift to us, and I would never forget it

As I remember their screams all I know is that they wanted to live and were afraid to die. Their emaciated small bodies were gassed, then burned, and what was left was strewn around the camp or thrown into the "Lake

EVERY Rosh Hashana Eve, after I have lit the candles, I shut my eyes and am back in Birkenau 52 years ago. I hear those screams of "Tate, Mame" and thank God that I lived to have my own children and grandchildren, who will never become anyone's slaves. My grandchildren and their friends light memorial candles for those other children, as do I. The responsibility they feel for keep-ing the memory of those nameless ones alive is a genuine reflection of the verse from the Ethics of the Fathers, "The people of Israel are responsible, one for the other." My hope is that generation after generation will continue this chain of remembrance. May those precious souls rest in peace.

Saddam goading Clinton?

IRAQ and the United States were on a collision course yesterday, with US warplanes moving within striking distance and Baghdad saying it had fired three more missiles at Western air patrols.

Undeterred by US threats of a "disproportionate" response, Iraq said it had fired for a second straight day on the Western aircraft that have enforced a "no-fly zone" for Iraqi aircraft in the north and south of Iraq since the 1991 Gulf War.

"Iraq will continue defending its national air space," Iraqi Information Minister Abd-al-Ghani Abd-al-Ghafur said before the latest missile firings. "Iraqis and the Iraqi armed forces will meet any aggression."

But the United States said after Iraq fired on US F-16s over northem Iraq on Wednesday that it was readying F-117A stealth bombers and B-52 long-range bombers for

The determination of the United States in dealing with the problem of Iraq should not be underestimated," President Bill Clinton said.

The United States was assembling a stronger force than used last week to hit Iraq with 44 cruise missiles in retaliation for Baghdad's military involvement in northern Iraq, an area out-of-bounds to Iraqi forces for the last five years.

US Defense Secretary William Perry said in Washington yesterday that the US forces building in the Gulf would use "robust" action to protect American interests.

US officials said eight US F-117A "stealth" fighters - accompanied by aerisi refueling tankers

- were leaving New Mexico later in the day on a non-stop 20-hour flight that would land them in Kuwait on Friday.

The Iraqi leader could be forgiven for sitting back to relish his success and gloat at his opponents' disarray. But instead, Saddam appears ready to risk all by goading the United States once more into military action.

Undaunted by overwhelming US weapons superiority, he told Iraqi pilots and anti-aircraft gunners to shoot down Western planes flying over his country and declared invalid the "no-fly zones" they have been patrolling. So why is Saddam still spoiling

Western diplomats said they were not surprised by the latest display of brinkmanship from Saddam, who led Iraq into a ruinous eight-year war with Iran before his 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

"He's made illogical and unpre-dictable decisions before," said one. "In this case, he's just following up a pledge to resist the no-fly

Hurricane Hortense grows stronger and moves north

NASSAU, Bahamas (Reuter) - A stronger, more powerful Hurricane Hortense headed toward the open Atlantic yesterday after dousing Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic with deadly flood waters that killed about two dozen people.

During the night, Hortense's maximum sustained winds strengthened to 115 mph (185 kmh), making the storm a dangerous Category 3 hurricane, the third one within a month after hurricanes Edouard and Fran.

Forecasters said Hortense was not expected to strike the US mainland or the central Bahamas, thanks to a cold weather front pushing it north, although there was an outside chance it might brush Cape Code, Massachusetts, this weekend.

But some of the tiny southern islands in the long Bahamas archipelago were pelted with rain and gusty winds as Hortense moved past. The airport on the southeastem island of San Salvador was shut down until tomorrow.

At 11 a.m. EDT, Hortense's center was at latitude 24.3 north and longitude 72.0 west, about 1,260 km south-southeast of Cape Hatteras, moving north-northwest at 16 kph, the National Hurricane Center said. A gradual turn to the north was expected yesterday and roday but forecasters said the US East Coast would begin to experience large swells by the weekend.

Hortense's official death toll in Puerto Rico reached 13 yesterday. mostly because of raging floods and mudslides, as police investigated a body found in Guayama, a southeastern town that experienced some of the worst flooding.

'We're expecting the number of dead and missing to rise," police spokeswoman Maribel Hernandez said. "We are just now getting into towns that were inaccessible."

Much of the US territory also remained without power.

Pakistani paramilitary soldiers watch yesterday as Afghan people, stuck on the other side of the Pakistan-Afghanistan border, wait for it to be opened at Torkham. Pakistan had closed the border on Monday, two days before the Taleban Islamic militia captured the Afghan town of Jalalabad.

TWA investigators consider blowing up empty 747

SMITHTOWN, New York (AP) -Investigators are considering blowing up a Boeing 747 to see if the wreckage would help them determine what caused the downing of TWA Flight 800, an official said yesterday.

"There was some discussion about blowing up a 747 to see the impact of a bomb or anything FBI Assistant Director James Kallstrom said. He confirmed a published report that the idea came up at a strategy session No decision has been made,

Kallstrom said. If investigators carry out the test, it would take place on the ground and the explosion most likely would be centered near the center fuel tank of the aircraft, The Washington Post reported. Crash investigators discussed the idea Wednesday at the Long Island bangar where salvaged pieces of plane wreckage are being stored. Officials stressed the idea was a suggestion that required additional discussion before it could be carried out. In Washington, Deputy Attorney General Jamie Gorelick said restaging an explosion is one way investigators can try to determine the cause of a plane crash.

"It's not uncommon in explosion cases to try to take a couple of theories and replicate the explosion. We've done that in many cases," Gorelick told reporters at a weekly Justice Department briefing. Asked if it were unusual for investigators to take so long to find a cause for such a crash, she said: "An eight-inch (20 cms) block could be the source that caused the crash, and if you're missing that particular piece you may not know what the cause

Meanwhile, retrieving the 30 percent of wreckage still on the ocean floor remains a top priority for investigators trying to learn whether the July 17 explosion that killed all 230 aboard was caused by a bomb, a missile or a mechanical malfunction.

The Navy will use side-scan sonar to map a wider area to search as it tries to finish retrieving the wreckage within two to three weeks, a source familiar with the operation told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

The recovery effort will depend largely on the weather. The Navv was keeping an eye on Hurricane Hortense, which was churning across the Atlantic toward the

'We're not seeking to toss out Hebron agreement'

NEWS IN FOCUS

Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu, in a Rosh Hashana interview with David Makovsky, insists his government will meet its commitments, in both the diplomatic and economic arenas

Meeting with Arafat

Q: What was going through your mind last week while you were sitting with the man you said you'd never meet - Yasser

A: Quite a few things, but I'll leave that to my memoirs. You won't give us a little glimpse into your thoughts?

I was thinking about the past and the many Israelis and Jews who lost their lives to terrorist attacks launched by the PLO. And at least I hoped and felt and wanted to believe that they indeed are moving towards a differently reality in the relationship. This is our purpose, and this is what we agreed is the standard we will hold the PLO accountable to. And time will tell if we shall succeed.

Now that the taboo has been broken, can you now see regular meetings between the two of Well, we discussed this matter and Arafat suggested that we discuss matters that are not resolved by subordinates.

I said let's not make their life too easy for them. Let's not make their life too easy and let them start throwing up everything, every other problem, to the senior level. I thought we should reserve that contact for the truly important or urgent things.

But you could pick up the phone if an urgent issue comes up, now that the ice has been broken.

if necessary, of course we shall Put the landmark meeting in a historic context with regard to what it means for the Likud. The landmark was caused before, in that we made a decision before the elections to abide by the signed agreements of the existing government, assuming of course, procity. Once that was taken, the meeting with Arafat was merely a derivative result. It seems there are now two camps in the Likud: the pragmatic camp and the ideological camp. Some say it's only a matter of time before you're going to have to face down such ideo-handle existing agreements. For example, way before Oslo, the first Likud convention after I was elected, in fact simultaneous to my election, we had a debate precisely on this point ... It seems to me that as part of the responsibilities of leading the government is to honor the international commitments of your predecessors.

Otherwise, there's no point in making international agreements. They would be eviscerated of any meaning, and this is something that I will insist on and this government will follow and anyone who is a member of this government will have to align themselves with [this].

Hebron

On one hand, you talk about your adherence to past agree-ments and you certainly expect the Palestinians to live up to what they signed, yet on the other hand, you say Israel can modify what it signed regarding Hebron.

No, on the contrary, that's not what I'm saying at all. I said that our fulfillment of the agreement depends on two things. One, reciprocity and two, security. Security is the foundation of all agreements. If in the application of the agreements, you collapse security, then you collapse the agreements, which is essentially what happened with the previous govern-

What we seek is not to violate the Hebron agreement, but to carry it out in a responsible way, in a way that the arrangements on the ground will be able to endure and not crumble before renewed boutsof terrorism. And remember, I said to Arafat that I think that is not only our interest, but it's a Palestinian interest as well.

We are not seeking to toss out the agreement on Hebron or to any of its central features. We are seeking modifications that will enable the Jewish community, the oldest Jewish community in the world, to live relatively normal lives and live in greater safety and greater security.

What aspect of the agreement as it exists now do you find to be untenable? If one looks at the map of Oslo 2, there is territorial contiguity between the Jewish areas in Hebron and between Hebron and Kiryat Arba. Your opponents, like Labor MK Ehud Barak and others, say that in the changes, and it will end up being essentially the same agreement. Well, we shall see.

Would you say the changes are going to be fundamental?

There will be modifications which I think are important. I don't want to say that we are going to toss out the agreement in many of its principle areas, because that's not my point. My point is not to obstruct progress, it's to facilitate it...

I think that the defense minister has suggested some modifications and we'll take it up with the Palestinians. I think they need to understand that our preference is generally constructive and not intended to divorce ourselves from commitments that were taken by the previous government. Do you see this done within back and haunt us. Palestinian economic progress and political moderation

Do you believe there is a correlation between Palestinian economic progress and their political moderation?

There is, It's not a one-to-one [ratio]. Economic progress is not a substitute for political solutions. And also, economic progress is not going to ensure political moderation. It can ameliorate a situation. It can prevent the recruitment of people who otherwise would not be radical in nature, but it is not going to alter the basic radical core that exists, whose agenda is political, religious, or ideological, rather than economic. The most fanatic leaders of any movement are not all poor. This is rule No. 1 in the history of radi-

Well, we are willing to cooperate to continue the political negotiations because we've undertaken that as a matter of principle.

We will not continue under the threat of terrorism. The threat of terrorism will be the first thing that will cause us to reconsider the wisdom of such negotiations, because if peace is purchased only as a temporary hiatus between bouts of terrorism, we'll never have peace. So I said to Arafat that the treatment of his actions against terrorism must be a constant and not a variable in our relationship.

You keep saying you will increase the number of Palestinian workers, given the security situation. But some say it's not a security issue since this situation has improved, but rather it more a function of the fact there are not to mention the 100,000 legal foreign workers and therefore there are not enough Palestinians. for Moreover, they say Israel does

You cannot overnight create such removal of workers; A - The various industries have to adjust; B-We need a mechanism, both legal and practical, to remove the workers and that's why we instructed the government ministries to do precisely that, and we are now going to receive a plan that will explain, in record time - in two weeks - how to take action against illegal foreign workers. Ehud Barak: Labor's answer to Netanyahu?

As Netanyahu's former commander, he might not like the comparison, but Barak now seems to be following in the PM's footsteps, writes Sarah Honig ABOR'S Ehud Barak is a relative newcomer to poliducs. As one who has not been embroiled in any of Israel's notoriously bloody internecine political brawls, he is by virtue of his lack of experience relatively clean. Thus far he has earned no demerits for conduct.

Sifting through the thin file of his political utterances, it is hard to find anything overly nasty or glaringly below the belt.

So it was surprising that he should of all things be so severely taken to task for having evinced very bad manners, if not outright callousness, when he threw his hat into the Labor leadership ring last

What may escalate into a very bitter battle for Labor's primacy got off to an odd start this week with a controversy over etiquette.

Barak's detractors charged that it was awfully bad form for him to have pulled the stunt he did just when Shimon Peres was abroad. Barak insisted that he told Peres and got his OK. Peres and his loyalists say it wasn't so.

Barak maintains that he let Peres in on his plans on Thursday of last week at a brief meeting in Peres's Tel Aviv office. According to Barak, Peres had then told him unequivocally that he has no intention of standing again for prime minister in the elections scheduled for the year

That statement, Barak insists, was the green light that allowed him to go ahead with his announcement. Had Peres not conferred his blessing, Barak claims, he would not have announced his candidacy for the Labor leadership and the party's nomination for prime minister.

The one obvious flaw with Barak's story is the fact that the Beit Hahayal hall in Tel Aviv, in which he planned a gathering of his supporters to presumably break the news, was booked for last Tuesday far in advance of the meeting with Peres a few days before. Barak claims that what was to take place in Beit Hahayal had nothing to do with his plans and was limited to a Rosh Hashana toast for about a thousand of Labor's who's who. Anyway, as things turned out, Barak's sidekicks could not contain themselves and spilled the beans about his bid for the party leadership before Barak's guests convened. This forced Barak to make his announcement at a hastily-summoned press conference a

Be that as it may, according to the Peres side, Barak heard nothing clear-cut from Peres about his plans. In fact, no one heard anything binding from Peres and the feeling in all quarters of the party was that Peres is hedging his bet and has not ruled anything out - not even running again. The assumption in Labor was that, if he could, Peres would put off the leadership showdown so that the new party chief would be chosen in 1999, a year before the elections, rather than in June 1997, as now scheduled. With his peremptory move, Barak may have taken Peres on and foiled whatever Peres may have had in mind.

Peres, it is botly maintained around him, not only did not give Barak anything like a go-ahead signal, but he heard not so much as a hint from Barak about plans to announce his candidacy and cer-tainly not that this would be done so immediately, while Peres is away in the US.

The first Peres heard of what is about to take place, his people claim, was after the rumors about Barak's impending announcement were in full circulation last Sunday, Barak then tracked Peres down by phone in an American airport just before Peres was to board a flight that would take him to New York. Peres deserved better, argue such proteges of his as MKs Yossi Beilin and Dalia Peres himself sounded irked on radio interviews when he snapped that if Barak wants to run "it's his right," but that no one has to right to announce in his name what he plans for the year 2000. "I will speak on my own behalf and make my own announcements when I see fit and when the time is right," Peres continued in the same piqued tone.

Peres may deny that he took umbrage and Barak may deny that he challenged Peres and behaved disrespectfully and unsympathetically towards him, but the near consensus in Labor is that Peres is very burt. According to Barak's likely opponent MK Haim Ramon, "Peres has been a sad man ever since his loss to Bibi. Every time I see him, my eyes moisten. I feel for him."

It wasn't very long ago when Ramon and Peres were the worst of enemies. This was after Ramon switched from the Peres side to back Yitzhak Rabin in his leadership challenge against Peres prior to the 1992 elections. Ramon then went on to shake the foundations of the Peres powerbase when he defeated the party machine in the Histadrut elections and then set in motion the Histadrut's disintegration. Most recently Ramon has become the party's whipping boy and his campaign strategy is roundly blamed for the May electoral debacle. Ramon is regarded as being at the lowest ebb of his political career, which is why it would serve him as much as Peres to postpone the leadership contest as much as possible.

This of course is precisely why Barak must make sure that nothing is put off and he must seize the moment right now. Barak somehow survived the last elections as Labor's sole spotless player. His boosters portray him as one who warned all along that Ramon was mismanaging the campaign and that everyone was underestimating Netanyahu and not taking his tenaciousness and proven ability into consideration.

But there are many other reasons for Barak being the great Labor hope for the next elections. The foremost reason is that he has so much in common with Netanyahu. Both hail from the same elite IDF unit and both are hawks. In fact Barak was such a thorn in the Rabin government's peace offensive that it was not certain that he would join Labor when he left the military. Some thought the Likud nearly as likely an option for Barak, had it perhaps not been for his kibbutz background and the fact that Labor was the party of power with more to offer.

His past outspoken hawkishness may have made Barak anathema to many on the Labor left who do not quite trust his commitment to the Peres-Beilin version of the peace process. Barak is often regarded as a Netanyahu clone and even his attempt to take over his party so soon after the electoral defeat is seen as a leaf out of the book Netanyahu wrote when he conquered the Likud in 1992.

But Barak's similarity to Netanyahu and his very hawkishness could make him as valuable a political asset as Rabin was in 1992. He could become another Mr. Security and do to Netanyahu what Rabin did to Yitzhak Shamir - lure the voters floating between Labor and the Likud.

This is perhaps what Barak meant, when, in making his announcement this week, he talked about "returning Labor to its natural position in the political map." The significance of what may have sounded like so much palaver was lost while Labor was debating whether

JOIN THE WORLD OF THE SAGES (חזייל)

After the destruction of the Second Temple, the Jewish people were confronted with the question to be or not to be.

At Yavne, Rabban Yohanan and Rabban Gamliel and their disciples chose to be.

Their efforts placed Judaism on a renewed path this time without the Temple.

Fulfillment of the mitzvot, the centrality of the Beit. Midrash, belief in the world to come and in future redemption became the focus of Judaism.

Shorashim, together with The Jerusalem Post, invites you to an English-speaking seminar on The World of the Sages (Hazal). With renowned lecturers Prof. Albert Baumgarten and Dr. David Satran and archeologists and guides Moti Aviam and Yoni Shapiro, we'll immerse ourselves in the sources and the sites.

We'll spend three days studying the sources and visiting the ancient synagogues of Hamei Tveriya and Kfar Nahum and the excavations of Beit Shearim, Zippori, Caesarea and Tiberias.

We'll stay at the comfortable guest house of Kibbutz Lavi in the Galilee.

The dates: Thursday, November 21 -Saturday, November 23

The price: NIS 980

Includes transportation from Jerusalem and Tel Aviv and return, lectures and discussions, entrance to all sites with on-the-spot explanations, accommodation at the Kibbutz Lavi guest house (sharing a double room), full board from Thursday evening until after Shabbat. IDF's Planning Branch: The 'what if?' people

Maj.-Gen. Shaul Mofaz is responsible for tailoring the defensive package to meet future threats against Israel. He spoke to Jerusalem Post Defense Correspondent Arieh O'Sullivan

The IDF has to give an answer to three principal areas and they are the product of the reality of recent years. The first is the fight against terrorism. The second is the readiness for war. Today we have peace with Jordan and Egypt. And this as far as we are concerned presents a situation which can influence determining the levels of the IDF.

The third is the second-ring countries. Iran and Libya, and in some ways Iraq, can create a threat which is mainly one of weapons of mass destruction. This presents a long-range threat to the State of Israel. We have to be prepared for a changing reality. We would very much want that we reach a peace when you draw up the multi-year plans, do you take into account the problems of motivation? Should you? much want that we reach a peace agreement with Syria. This has a very decisive influence on the development of the future of the Middle East. But this is more a

The threat is one of conflict. I would divide them into two. One is to have a normal life, and the goal of terror is not to allow this and harm the sense of security in the State of Israel. It is not existential. But a total war by a number of nations can surely present an existential threat to the State of Israel. The strength of the IDF is built in a very significant way, on the ability of the reserve army. So the necessity of continuing the reserve army with an emphasis on the combat forces is still needed.

This is a very difficult area to forecast. It is not an exact field, and not like a budget where you know more or less what you will have for the next year. We have draft, and against this we try to forecast the scope of the desire to get into combat units using the experience of the past. You can never know how youth will behave in another two or three years or what kind of motivation they'll have. I can say that in elite units we have no problem. I think that at this stage it doesn't have any decisive influence. But it is a matter we have to take into account in the future if we see that it is a matter likely to influence the structure of the forces.

For the moment, it doesn't look like it has an influence, because for now we are able to meet the scope we planned. But we have to look into steps we may take. But this is less in the hands of the army and is more a societal process. I think the State of Israel as a state and the population which lives here and has linked its fate with it, needs to know that the threats have not ceased. There is no shadow of a doubt that we need to continue strengthening the army and the readiness of boys and girls to volunteer for combat units for the coming years because the quality of manpower for us is one of the main components of our strength.

How does the fact that more and more of the IDF's budget is being eaten up on running costs, salaries, routine security operations, maintenance and pensions each year figure into planning? What is the IDF going to give up to keep within the budget procure-

There has been a reduction in the defense budget's part of the GNP. The cuts affect the army, they affect the structure. We are now involved in a process of planning to adjust the program to the restric-tion of the budget. First there was a blow to the permanent forces. The second part is the budget of the army. Do I know what the significance of this will be? I don't know.

We are carrying out a long line of actions aimed at meeting the budget cuts in the running costs. In my opinion there are places where we will have to reduce the number of people. We very much don't want to harm the armaments of the military and the combat units. I think the areas of high priority need to be protected.

To tell you what we are going to cut is not a problem of censorship. I just don't know yet what is going to be harmed. I very much hope we don't hit areas which are connected to the strengthening of the army like armaments, central projects and force structure. We will apparently reduce the running costs. That is very clear to us. Reality calls for us to reduce the standard of living in the army You want to hear specifics, but I tell you, we don't have them yet.

In light of the budget cuts and the rising needs of the army, it appears that the IDF will start eating its supplies. What will this mean in the long term?

We will have to reexamine the multi-year plan of the army and see if it will be able to exist with the budget problems and if not, we may have to implement adjustments or changes. We want a multi-year budget. Today we don't have that.

One of the proposals is, together with the Finance Ministry and the defense establishment, to come up with a situation where we have a multi-year budget. When you have a multi-year plan, then you know how to build and carry out your program better.

This exists in other countries.

The moment you have a multi-year program and you don't have the funds, the program is more vulnerable to changes and shakeups. The moment you have a multi-year budget your ability to carry it out is much better. We are moving toward that. I presume that toward the end of this year we will start working on this. After the situation with the 1997 budget becomes clear, we will see if we will be able to implement this principle.

How will the IDF look in the

The other field will be introducing technology and advanced weapons systems.... It's very difficult to say what kind of army we'll have in 10 to 15 years from now. We can say what the directions are. there will be an emphasis on the quality of the manpower, strengthening of the commanders.

There are two areas which will exist as long as there is a threat. One is the capability of giving an answer to terror.

I don't see terrorism being eliminated and evaporating from the world in the near future. And the second thing is the preparedness of the IDF to fight a war that is forced upon it. This dictates that we will have to maintain a trained army. To say what our working plan will be in a decade's time is very difficult. We can only give general direc-

Should the IDF in any way set the norms for Israeli society?

They say "we are a people's army." We are part of the society here. But I think it is very difficult for the army to influence society. The society, particularly those being drafted, are very influenced by their families and the educational network. The drop in motivation is not a product of the army. It is a product of processes in

Israeli society. But it is correctable. Our ability to influence society is through the army, in the values and norms in the army and the conveying of messages to the population through the quality of work performed in the army. But to influence and cause changes in Israeli society is, in my opinion, in the hands of the leadership and education system. The army can pass on messages, but it can't make changes in the society. That's not its role.

The role of the army is to serve as a defensive shield. When you get young men to the army, you consolidate them and you instruct them to participate in the defense. Service in the army is a value and it still exists in my opinion. When you go to work your army record is a valuable status of who you are and what you have done and is also a scale of success. Because the army presents everyone with equal opportunities and everyone gets to where they do first off through their own desires and later through their talents. I hope that this reduction in motivation doesn't also erode this value.

There has been some criticism of the military participating in political negotiations. You are now a member of the steering Do you feel that this position is a natural one to participate in these contribute to it?

First of all, the decision to join the steering committee was not mine. It was a decision of the minister of defense and the chief of the general staff, and I presume that someone approved it. Our part in the steering committee is to present the position of the IDF. The sible for this for years. Our strategic department has been responsi-ble for consolidating the IDF's security positions. It is the role of the Planning Branch to present defense positions and security interests of the IDF. It is not just restricted to the Palestinians, but in a wide variety of issues such as our foreign relations. We are responsible for presenting the IDF's position from a security angle.

I think this is right and should continue. It is very important that the IDF be involved only in the area of presenting the security position. How it is presented and in which forum is another question. This is the very defined role of the Planning Branch. It is not a question of whether I want to be a part of this or not. No one asked me and I don't think it has to enter it. Someone has to present the positions of the army. You can't make decisions which have an impact on security without the IDF giving its position.

You met recently with the Jordanian deputy chief of staff. How do you see Israel's military ties developing with Jordan?

There is a very warm relation-ship with Jordan. We spoke of a few matters on the agenda, and relations are very good on the military level. There is a list of things we discuss with them; the cooperation along the border, the fight against terror. We want in the future to widen the relations between the armies and defense establishments. I hope that the relations between us and the Jordanians will get stronger.

Will there be anything more formal, like a military alliance?

With the Jordanians, we have a relationship of cooperation. It is in a process of development. Some of the matters are being discussed and some have to be decided on. But there is a good open system of relations with the Jordanians. They see the development of the relations in all areas, and in my opinion in the long term there will be progress in the relations between the armies and in other areas with a country with which it has a peace

Former navy commander Ze'ev Almog commends Netanyahu on easing the planning of IDF operations in south Lebanon, and emphasizes the importance of the military in backing up diplomatic progress, Steve Rodan reports

E'EV Almog still recalls the planning a lightning-type assault alarm in the military in ■1979, in the wake of several terrorist outrages in which dozens of people were killed by Palestinians who had infiltrated from the sea. Then chief of staff Lt.-Gen. Rafael Eitan ordered a string of 58 outposts erected along the Mediterranean coast. But Almog, then commander of the Navy, had another idea: Hit the terrorists in Lebanon before they

It took months of effort but Eitan was convinced. Units of Israel's Palestinian bases. Within months, the terrorist sea-attacks stopped.

You can't say this is coincidental but in the last 18 years there have been no successful attacks," Almog says. "And there were many attempts. But they never succeeded because the terrorists were foiled early."
Prime Minister Binyamin

Netanyahu's government wants to return to those glory days. But this time, the arena is south Lebanon. where Hizbullah has hammered IDF and South Lebanese Army forces for the past six months in raids that have been characterized by both daring and competency.

Netanyahu has ordered the IDF as well as the security services to strike back and take the initiative. Military sources say that for the first time in years, IDF units are working overtime in their efforts to increase their presence in south Defense sources say the new orders to the IDF suit the new policy being presented by Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai. Called "Lebanon first," the Mordechai policy advocates that Israel and Syria discuss a series of confidence-building measures to restore order in south Lebanon.

It also makes the Lebanese government and any of its allies responsible for attacks on IDF troops.

These sources say Syrian troop movements might be a warning to Israel that it has not abandoned the possibility of a military attack on the Golan Heights and could be on the mountain. A second development is the increasing effectiveness of Hizbullah.

IDF sources say that what only a few years ago was a group that could recruit suicide bombers, has now become perhaps the most sophisticated guerrilla movement in the world. Hizbullah, the sources say, can perform a range

Their communications system is advanced and has evaded IDF tracking. In the field, they are able special forces repeatedly struck at to attack in battalion formation, complete with artillery support. "We are not talking about a few fanatics," a senior IDF source says. "These people use their heads all the time and learn constantly from their experiences with us. Their goal is always to be one step ahead of us."

Still, the new IDF orders in south Lebanon are seen as heavensent for the head of IDF northern command, Maj.-Gen. Amiram Levine.

For years, Levine had pressed for the IDF to get out of their bunkers and attack Hizbullab and its allies in south Lebanon.

But, under the governments of Yitzhak Rabin and Shimon Peres, the sources say, Levine was given little authority. Rabin insisted on approving virtually every special operation in south Lebanon.

Under Peres, the operations had to move more slowly up the chain of command, where the then prime minister received the proposal from the chief of staff. By the time Peres got around to the issue, the terrorists had packed up and left," a defense source says. Netanyahu and Mordechai have ordered the process streamlined. defense sources say.

Mordechai, who as head of northern command had seen his proposals for special operations often vetoed by Rabin and his then chief of staff Ehud Barak, now allows Levine to decide when and how to attack. "There's no ques-tion that the IDF is more free in its operations in Lebanon," a defense official says. "More means have been developed. There is an increase in the number of special

The army today is more intelligent and more determined. But fighting Hizbullah is not only in the field," the official added, "it also means striking at its infrastructure and getting the support of the local population." The sources say Levine has taken advantage of his new authority.

As former head of an elite army unit, Levine is regarded as an advocate of the use of daring missions to demoralize guerrilla forces. "He's very creative," says

Col. (res.) Benny Beit-Or, a former military attache at the Israeli Embassy in Washington with long experience in special operations. "Amiram Levine is very original in his thinking, and in this way he's exceptional."

The new policy has also included steps to bolster the SLA. For years, defense officials warned of decreasing morale in the 2,800man force of General Antoine:

Israeli negotiations with Syria and Lebanon - maintained despite attacks in south Lebanon - had convinced many who had supported the SLA that the IDF was tired of fighting and sought a way to withdraw to its northern border. But defense sources acknowledge that an activist IDF posture in south Lebanon will mean a lot more fighting and perhaps more

Privately, some commanders have expressed alarm at the number of IDF casualties, the ease with which Hizbullah guerrillas strike Israeli troops and escape. and the level of competency of some units serving in south

"The kill ratio of the IDF to the Hizbullah should be 10:1 on our side," says David (Dudu) Shick, a reserve colonel and deputy commander of the sea commandos, who participated in numerous special operations. "That ratio today is nearly 1:1. Shick says for years the IDF has simply been operating the wrong way in south Lebanon.

The army has been taking a page out of the US experience in heavy artillery and bombers to fight the elusive Vietcong. "The trick is to hurt their morale," Shick

"But after every attack, what do we do? We call in the air force. So, what do we end up bombing? Just boulders.

Privately, some military sources agree with Shick. They acknowledge that the IDF's ability to hurt Hizbullah is limited.

With the exception of some units, most of the troops serving in the south don't know Lebanon well - leaving the advantage to Hizbullah and its local collaborators. In addition, the sources say, intelligence on Hizbullah remains of IDF troops, sometimes even as the soldiers were preparing to sur-Hizbullah prise fighters. Moreover, the constant turnover of commanders has meant that many inexperienced young officers have led their troops into dangerous situations in south Lebanon. Levine has established a special unit that is deployed just in south Vietnam, which kept calling out Lebanon, but it is not large enough to handle the massive number of operations needed daily in the area. Other elite units are in Lebanon for too short a period of time to be effective.

The most glaring absence is that of the Navy, which for years has provided special forces to participate in commando raids in south Lebanon.

Today, the sources say, the level of the Navy's special forces has declined so much that they are no longer summoned by the IDF. "In the past, every attack on an IDF outpost always was followed by a pursuit by our soldiers," a military source says. "Today, we don't have enough soldiers who are capable enough of reacting to such attacks." Almog, the former naval commander, says he's confident that the IDF can quickly adjust and provide enough troops necessary to maintain pressure on Hizbullah. But he says that any offensive in Lebanon will fail unless it has a clear diplomatic objective. That, he says, must be to force the Lebanese government to impose order in the south.

And the way to do it, Almog says, is to make the Lebanese government responsible for every attack on IDF troops.

"We have to tell the Lebanese government that if you don't take responsibility you will be hurt all over Lebanon," he says. "We should attack only military targets, whether they are Lebanese army bases, or even Syrian soldiers. This can be done in low-intensity operations without casualties. This has to continue all the time until the attacks stop."

If they don't, Almog says, the IDF should add new targets. These include vital civilian installations such as power stations, bridges and strategic factories. He warns against shelling towns, even those suspected of harboring Hizbullah fighters, saying this is exactly what the Shi'ite organization wants.

"The diplomatic aspect of this offensive is vital: to get the IDF out of Lebanon," Almog says. "The only chance we have is diplomacy backed up by military The state of the s

The leaf we turn over is a national fig leaf

I was a year that began with unprecedented internal division and violence. Implementation of the Oslo accords, relinquishing parts of our national homeland to foreign control, was met by the Palestinian Arabs with escalating terror against Israeli civilians on the roads and in the major cities, fragmenting society.

The year 5756 will be remembered as the year an Israeli prime minister was murdered by an assassin motivated by politics and overwhelming arrogance. It was also the year government delegit-imization of its opponents reached a dangerous climax.

Jewish settlers in Judea, Samaria and Gaza were made scapegoats for the deteriorating security situation by a government that declared itself responsible for the safety of only 97% of the citizens, implicitly leaving the others, the settlers, beyond the pale.

In the wake of the Rabin assassination came the revelation that the government had employed provocateurs, among them Yigal Amir's associate Avishai Raviv, to infiltrate and discredit extraparliamentary opposition groups.

Prominent rabbis, all of whom were subsequently cleared of any wrongdoing, were publicly summoned to police interrogation. Demonstrators who organized sit-down strikes were charged with incitement and threatened with long prison sentences. The attorney-general was instructed to investigate if the use of the slogan "Netanyahu is good for the Jews" was a prosecutable offense.

As the year draws to an end, the greatest achievement of Binyamin Netanyahu's government in its first months in office has been the change in public climate. The prime minister promised to bring peace among Jews as a prerequisite to peace agreements with our Arab neighbors and, so far, he has delivered on his pledge.

Jewish settlers are no longer secondclass citizens whose death at the hands of Arab terrorists is accepted passively as "the price of peace."

Significantly, no group in opposition to the present government has been forced by the administration to take their place as the new pariahs. All points of view, from Peace Now to Moledet, from Meretz to the Eda Haredit, are able to express themselves without fear of official delegitimization. No group feels, as the settlers did over the past four years, that its very existence is threatened by the state.

Political differences have not disappeared. The debate over the establishment of a Palestinian state, expansion of settlements and a withdrawal from the Golan Heights goes on unabated. Yet the atmosphere within the country has become less repressive and more tolerJONATHAN BLASS

But why?

The answer is that the people have had their say on Oslo and its aftermath, restoring a democratic process that had been in limbo since the Oslo accords were signed three years ago without a democratic mandate.

Democracy is in itself a force for conciliation. This is because in a democracy, opponents of government policy know that as much as they dislike it, the government has received authorization from the population to carry out the policies they oppose.

Even when they are convinced those policies are wrong or dangerous, they recognize that responsibility for them lies with the people, who elected the government. It is the electorate that must be addressed and won over.

Netanyahu's platform in this year's elections, for example, stressed three points that by campaign's end every schoolchild knew by heart no division of Jerusalem; Israel would remain on the Golan Heights; no Palestinian state.

If the prime minister keeps faith with the electorate, the opposition, both in and out of the Knesset, will know that its job is to demonstrate to the public that the position it endorsed in the polls has proven to be against the public's own best interest. Hostility against the government for doing what it promised, and was elected to do, will be muted.

Honesty is essential to a sound democracy, but honesty was a casualty of the Rabin-Peres government and its demise threatened the stability of democracy and nearly shattered society.

Rabin promised in the 1992 elections not to withdraw from the Golan, but once elected, he accepted a principle of "full withdrawal for full peace." He promised he would not recognize the PLO, but proceeded to do just that. He campaigned on a platform that ruled out the establishment of a Palestinian state, but his successors in the Labor Party say today that the Oslo accords make the establishment of a Palestinian state an inevitability.

On the very first opportunity the electorate was given to express its opinion of the Labor government's handling of the "peace process," it threw that government out of office, installing in its place the man who led the opposition to

The frustration and division within the country during the Rabin-Peres years flowed from the knowledge that the nation had been saddled with a policy it had never voted for.

That the government felt justified in oursuing a policy involving a major shift from Israel's traditional positions without a clear and substantial democratic mandate testified to its belief that "peace," as it understood it, was an over-riding, almost "theological" good that took precedence over "lesser" values like democracy. "Missionary" zeal pitted against popular opposition bred, of necessity, repression and fear. Many who claim to be democrats hold democracy in low regard, preferring political mechanisms that would set their own values as limits on the popular will.

Those, for example, who charge that Halacha is incompatible with democracy know that halachic principles can be incorporated into Israeli law only to the extent they are adopted by a democratic majority of the Knesset. Still, they would have the Supreme Court disqualify halachic considerations as "undemocratic" on the basis of European values accepted by some justices but never democratically approved by the public. If the Knesset, adopting halachic values, limits the kind of business that can be open on Shabbat, or the sale of nonkosher meat, or denies a homosexual partner rights awarded a spouse, should the Supreme Court, on the basis of opposing values, be allowed to overturn the legislation? In a democracy shouldn't the arbiter of public values be the public or its elected representatives? If, instead, it finds itself subject to values imposed upon it by those who see themselves, by some intrinsic right, oracles of "enlightened" opinion, isn't social unrest and internal division a natural, almost necessarv. result?

The tendency to dismiss the role of democracy in determining both law and policy has made the public seem irrelevant. It is not. The people count. Netanyahu was elected in 5756 because the people, not the media or the social establishment, endorsed his political

First chief rabbi Abraham Isaac Kook wrote that the redemption of Israel is essentially a metamorphosis within the Jewish people. More important than any change in government or any new law is the gradual emergence, within the people, of a distinctly Israeli Jewish identity, one that includes land and spirit, physical nature and abstract truth.

On Rosh Hashana as we look to the future, a clear lesson of the year 5756 is that those of us who would like to see the country become even more Jewish or more committed to the Land of Israel must address their efforts not only to politicians but to the people themselves.

Dry Bones

THE Talmudic Sages suggest that the state of the world depends on the state of the PREDICTING WHAT NEXT YEAR MIGHT judiciary. If the generation is heavily beset with vicissitudes and tribulations, Rabbi Yosse ben Elisha tells us, look into the quality of its dayanim (Shabbat 139a). And Rabbi Shimon ben Lakish tells us that appointing unfit people as dayanim is tantamount to idolatry (Sanhedrin Tb). When we speak of dayanim today, we mean only the rabbinical judges comprising the religious courts. In the talmudic glossary, dayanidayanim is syn-onymous with the biblical shofet/shoftim, meaning simply judges, both civil and religious. But it is sometimes used to embrace all the present-day categories of leadership: political, religious and social, as well as iudicial.

So if the Jewish state's survival depended solely on the quality of our dayanim and their performance, at least as reflected in our news media, I fear we would have to diagnose ourselves as seriously ill. As the Sages tell us: Woe to the generation that judged its dayanim; woe to the generation whose dayanim need to be judged (Midrash Ruth Rabba 1:1).

Fortunately we have enough Jews to hold our society together by virtue of their ethical and/or spiritual and/or intellectual quality surpassing that of many of our davanim. I refer to the many thousands of Israeli Jews who give of their heart, energy, time and material in acts of hessedigemillut hassadim - "lovingkindness" - for their fellow Israeli Jews and non-Jews.

We are also blessed with numerous non-Jews similarly engaged. But I am focusing here on those who are - or claim to be - directly concerned with the Jewish character of the state of Israel.

Those in whose daily agenda gemillus hassadim/hessed enjoys a high priority are acting according to the dictum the Sages ascribe to King David, that a Jew is recognizable by the threefold

The national 'cement' A VIEW FROM NOV

hallmark of rahmanus (mercy, compassion); bayshanut (modesty, a sense of shame), and gemillut hassadim (Yevamot 79a). The Sages are not telling us that these are inborn Jewish traits. They are simply laying down a code of conduct and suggesting that anyone who displays a lack of these traits is behaving like a barbarian, not as a Jew ought to behave.

For all the importance of the laws of kashrut, Shabbat observance, and numerous other "ritual" precepts - or, as the sources call them, "precepts concerning the relationship between Man and the Almighty" - the talmudic Sages, like the biblical Prophets, single out the "precepts between Man and his fellows," the precepts concerning our conduct toward each other.

A cardinal tenet of Jewish law is that observing Yom Kippur properly gains us expiation of all our sins except those we committed against our fellows, unless we have asked and received their forgiveness and made all possible As Hillel put it to that heathen:

"Don't do to others what you hate to have done to you: this is the sum of the Torah. The rest is exposition – go and learn it" (Shabbat 31a).

AS FOR the threefold hallmark: rahmanut is from the same root as rehem, womb, thus suggesting "mother-feeling."

Bayshanut refers to the various nuances of modesty and shame. One nuance is well covered in Helena's reproach to Hermia in Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream (III, ii, 286): "Have you no modesty, no maiden shame, no bashfulness?"

Here we have three terms from three different roots, each with a somewhat different connotation, used synonymously. This is the bayshanut that Odysseus and Nausikaa show they possess after come upon Odysseus lying unconscious and naked where he had been washed ashore on Shkeria island (Homer's Odyssey.

Book VI). Bayshanut shares a root with busha. This means shame in the sense of disgrace, as Prophet Obadiah tells Esau's Edomite descendants: "For the violence done to your brother Jacob [i.e.

the Jewish people] busha shall cover you" (1:10). But it also connotes remorse over a misdeed. In the Haftara read in the morning service on the second day of Rosh Hashana, Jeremiah quotes Enhraim, who personifies the Northern Kingdom of Israel, as saying to God: "After I strayed, I repented; ...I was ashamed [boshti] ...because I felt the disgrace of my youth'" (31:19).

Gemillut hassadim is closely related to hessed, which is variously rendered in English as grace, mercy, lovingkindness. Those two Hebrew terms are often used interchangeably with tzedaka, which is commonly ren-But there is a difference.

In The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, the first definition given for "charity" is "Christian love." In other dictionaries, too. this concept features in primary definitions of the word.

Tzedaka is related to tzedek, which as a noun means means righteousness, justice, and as an adjective means authentic, honest. So tzedaka doesn't depend on the benefactor's love of the beneficiary. When you perform an act of tzedaka you are only doing what is just and right: giving those in need of material or spiritual help what they are entitled to expect from you as a person living by the rules of tzedek.

Gemillut hassadimihessedizedaka is not only intended to mark the Jew; it is one of the three elements that make life livable. "Shimon Hatzaddik said: Three things susthe Phaikian princess's girls tain the world: Torah [i.e. learning and piety], labor, and gemillut has-sadim" (Avot 1:2). We are told that once, Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai and Rabbi Yehoshua were leaving Jerusalem. Passing the ruins of the just-destroyed Temple, Rabbi Yehoshua wept over the fact that there was no longer the sacrificial service for the expiation of sins.

Not so, there is gemillut hassadim, Rabbi-Yohanan said, citing Hosea 6:6: "For [God says] I desire hessed, not sacrifice...' (Avot D'Rabbi Natan 4:21).

This is expressed even more sharply in Isaiah 58, which is the Haftara read in the Yom Kippur morning service.

And Rabbi Asi teaches that tzedaka is as important as all the other precepts together (Bava Batra 9a). What is more, rejecting the duty of gemillut hassadim is tantamount to heresy (Kohelet Rabba 7:1), and not giving tzedaka is tantamount to idolatry (Ketubot 68a).

AMONG THOSE many thousands if not myriads of Israeli Jews who, by virtue of their heavy investment in gemillut hassadim/hessed/tzedaka are the pillars and cement of our society, Mitzion association.

Confession: The essence of the mitzva of repentance

IN His infinite wisdom, God could have commanded a Torah which does not allow for the possibility of fixing mistakes, righting wrongs, turning wickedness into righteousness, or foolishness into wisdom. You either got it right the first time or never. Repentance wouldn't exist!

Fortunately, God gives second chances. And indeed, Rosh Hashana is the first day of this period each year - the 10 Days of Repentance, which make human repair and rehabilitation possible. That's the good news. The bad news is that too many of us do not take proper advantage of these days. We merely go through the motions of Jewish ritual, but do not attempt to do what is necessary, to truly confront ourselves and repair our relationship with our fel-

But what do we have to do? To a large extent, the answer is found in Maimonides's Mishne Torah, in this case in his Laws of Repentance. In the first halacha of the very first chapter, he estab-lishes an essential principle of repair. "If a person intentionally or unintentionally vio-lates any one of the mitzvot in the Torah. whether it be a positive or a negative com-mandment, when he repents and turns from this sin, he is required to confess [vidui] before God, blessed be He, as it says in the verse: 'If a man or woman sins against his fellow man, thus being untrue to God, and that soul being guilty, he must confess the sin that he has committed. (Num. 5:6) This is the confession of words (vidui

Now if Maimonides is teaching us the concept of repentance concept of repentance, why does he choose this particular verse? This past

Tel Arth

Sabbath's reading of Nitzavim provided us with a verse which seems a far more reasonable source for the law of repentance. Moses is addressing the people of Israel. "And you shall return [shuva] unto the Lord your God, and hearken to His voice according to all that I command you this day, you and your children, with all your heart, and all your soul." (Deut.

Apparently Maimonides wants us to understand that, first of all, repentance involves reparation of our interpersonal relationships, since the verse he cites deals with one who stole from a proselyte or took a false oath; apparently citing the verse from Nitzavim, which speaks of returning to God, would be giving the wrong emphasis. Indeed, the Mishna in Tractate Yoma 85b rules that the almost automatic forgiveness of Yom Kippur is limited to sins between humans and God - transgression of a ritualistic nature. Sins in interpersonal relationships require each of us to approach the people we have wronged and ask their forgiveness!

Secondly, by citing the verse he does, Maimonides emphasizes the necessity of verbal confession, which is the essence of his biblical and halachic citation. Verbal formulation of one's sin - without attempting to justify or rationalize - is difficult enough when no one else is within hearing range. Such confession becomes infinitely more difficult when it from getting a raise.

Despite its inherent discomfiture, it is just such a combination that Jewish law expects of us during this period. The Talmud (B.T. Yoma 87a) recounts an incident concerning R. Abba, who had been wronged by R. Yirmiya. R. Yirmiya went to seek forgiveness, but only got as far as the doorpost of R. Abba's house. Apparently face-to-face confrontation was too difficult. The Talmud goes on to recount that when R. Abba's maidservant. threw out the dirty water she inadvertently spilled it on R. Yirmiya's head. With apparent relief, R. Yirmiya took his leave, quoting the verse: "And [God] lifts the needy out of the ashheap." (Psalms When R. Abba heard what had happened, he went out to appease R. Yirmiya, quoting the verse: "Go abase yourself and importune your neighbor." (Proverbs 6:3)

What is the Talmud trying to teach us? Certainly, R. Yirmiya did the right thing when he went to seek forgiveness from R. Abba, but he was either too embarrassed or too frightened to engage in real confrontation. When the dishwater landed on his head, he saw this as his just penalty, thinking that further confrontation would be unnecessary. R. Abba ran out to teach R. Yirmaya that being doused with dirty water and the necessity of confession are two separate matters. Just as R. Abba runs out to directly confess and request appeasement for his maid's thoughtless act, so is R. Yirmiya duty bound to "abase himself and importune" R. Abba for the wrong he did to him.

The Talmud continues to narrate other stories of the seeking of forgiveness. We are even told of Rav, who was delivering an important Talmudic discourse, which he repeatedly reviewed from the beginning when each of three sages entered after he had begun. When R. Hanina entered, however, he did not start over again. R. Hanina was hurt by this apparent slight, and Rav sought R. Hanina's forgiveness for the next 13 Yom Kippurs!

It is certainly difficult to confront a person and say: "I spoke ill about you to a common acquaintance," or even "I feel that I have been unfair to you." But that's what teshuva is all about. Maimonides teaches us that without confrontation and confession, real repair on the human level is hardly possible.

The mitzva of repentance is essentially the mitzva of confession, not only to God, but also to your neighbor, and not only to the neighbor who knows you've wronged him, but even to the one who has no idea. And not only to your neighbors, but even to your spouse and children. Those closest to us dare not be taken for granted, and especially ought to hear our confessions of short temper and sometimes neglect.

Only when we honestly confront those we have wronged do we make it possible to avoid repeating the infraction.

T the same time Israelis were rushing to obtain gas masks, as the recent events in Iraq prompted them to remember that their kits had expired, or that they never even bothered to collect any protection for their three-year-old, Israel's only gasmask factory is facing closure.

Last week's Scud scare came just a month after the government, under heavy pressure from the Finance Ministry, decided that come January 1 the IDF would no longer be updating or issuing gas

The move is to save NIS 120 million from the budget. But managers of the only factory in Israel which produces nuclear, biological and chemical (NBC) protection say the decision would force them to fire scores of workers. But worse, they warn it would lead to the liquidation of an industry which it spent 29 years perfecting, leaving the state with no way of supplying its citizens with gas masks.

The scaling down of militaryrelated industries around the world usually reflects a reduced threat of war, as peace proliferates in the global village. But the bizarre situation created here is that a factory risks being virtually shut down not because of peace, but because the government can't meet the costs.

Israel set up Shalon Chemical Industries Ltd. in the prelude to the Six Day War to provide soldiers with gas masks. Today, the factory spreads out over 15,000 square meters in tidy quarters in Kiryat Gat's industrial zone. Due to the security nature of the product, Shalon produces everything it needs to provide Israel with the complete NBC kit, including the rubber for the masks, plastic and metal parts, the filters and electricinating what he calls a vital branch in Israel's security. Despite last week's Scud scare, Shalon has not received any indication that the government will rescind its decision. Some of the items produced by the factory were as a result of the Gulf war - like the bardas protective hood for children and shmartaf infant protector, and they cannot be found anywhere else in the world. "We'll cope. The factory won't shut, but the infrastructure for NBC protection will cease to exist," Baharad said turning his open palm over on his desk. It will be like cutting off the branch we are sitting on."

ISRAEL and Sweden are the only countries in the world which have decided to equip their citizens with NBC protection. Since 1991, Israel has sunk NIS 1.197 billion in defending the home front. Of this NIS 770m. has been spent on gas masks. Out of nearly six million residents in Israel, some 400,000 still do not have gas masks. Each year 118,000 children are born who need to be equipped, and an average of 80,000 people immigrate.

"There is no limit for security.

You can invest and invest and invest," said OC Home Front Maj.-Gen. Shinnel Arad. "Israel has the best protection for its population in the world." But, Arad added, the final decision was one of costs. Each year some 12 percent of gas masks expire and need to be updated. If the updating ceases all gas masks currently in the hands of the public will be out of date in another seven years at best. Not only that, but the people joining the circle of the protected population each year means that less than half the country will have adequate protection by the turn of the century.

Obviously, senior commanders in the Home Front believe the existing policy is correct and altering it would confound the IDF's entire civilian protection doctrine. "Without the gas masks, the whole package is damaged," Arad said.
"But the responsibility is on the government," he added in an attempt to absolve any hint he was interfering with non-military deci-sions. Defense officials say there is going to be another discussion on the gas-mask issue and that the previous decision was not final. They say they want to try and moderate multi-year plans so that vital factories remain open. Shalon has tried to branch out into the civilian and foreign market which today accounts for 10 per-cent of its sales. Shalon is a private company, but since it produces a military-related item, Baharad said, it needs a Defense Ministry permit to sell abroad. A clandestine attempt to sell gas masks to Arab countries during the Gulf war was foiled partly due to this. Today, Shalon is busy filling in last orders for the army. But most machines are idle and covered with plastic sheeting. Down to 150 core workers, most of whom have been there for over 20 years, the atmosphere is gloomy and incredulous.

Menachem Feldman, head of the workers' committee, said at last week's events show "that the decision to halt the updating plan was not right. I can't understand how they came to this decision. What's NIS 120 million? Everyday we hear how Ariel Sharon is going to invest NIS 100 million here and another NIS 100 million there.

How far have we come?" Eli Yosef, spokesman for the Finance Ministry, said the decision by the Cabinet was taken after a serious examination into the Home Front's multi-year plan and after receiving the opinions of intelli-gence officials.

The budget must now be approved by the Knesset, which in effect leaves it open to modification. "It's painful, but it's not my problem only. It's the whole country's. We are only a rider on the wagon. The government has to decide in which direction that wagon is headed," Baharad said. "First they talk of harming the gas-mask defense of civilians. What's next? The shelters?"

The soft side to his nature

GRAPEVINE GREER FAY CASHMAN

TOTORIOUS for his spontaneous and often sharp, straight-from-the-hip remarks, President Ezer Weizman also has a very soft side as evidenced on at least two occasions this week. One was at a pre-Rosh Hashana reception for new immigrants at which the president was entranced by one of the very junior guests and eventually found himself with two little girls on his lap. Another was at the ceremony celebrating the issue of the Bezeq phone card commemorating 100 years of Zionism. Noting that young people today don't touch each other when they dance, the president said that things were quite different in his youth, and that even today, the sound of tango music prompts him to spin around the floor with his wife Reuma in FORMER TOPLINE models Liora Lapidot, Karen Dansky, Hanita Tzentner, Kitty Maman, Batya Dissentchik and Hava Levy came briefly out of retirement this week, and once more took to the runway, in a voluntary capacity, to display some of the garments they used to model for Rojy Ben Yosef and the late Finny Leitersdorf in the 1960s and '70s. The flight into fashion nostalgia was appropriately at Shenkar College, which is celebrating the publication by senior staff member Ayala Raz of her comprehensive book Changing Times - 100 Years of Israeli Fashion - 1882-1982. Both the fashions and the models looked every bit as good now as they did in their heyday. Enthusiastically applauding Ben Yosef, once considered the high priestess of Israeli fashion, were past and present fellow designers Rikki Ben Ari, Jerry Melitz, Miri Shafir, Noa Arber, Lily Darvish and Yuval Caspin. Not yet 40, Caspin, who also served as the gracious MC for the occasion. started his career in the year in which the book finishes.

AN INTERESTING revelation by the author herself was that way back in the early 1940s, overseas buyers flocked to Tel Aviv, which became a fashion alternative to Nazi-occupied Paris. Slides of clothes being worn in Tel Aviv at the time proved that residents in the city certainly had flair. A revelation of another kind was made by Maskit founder Ruth Dayan who disclosed that the now-defunct famous chain of stores established to provide employment for new immigrants and to encourage the perpetuation of traditional arts and crafts, would have closed after one year of operations had it not been for Leitersdorf's designs which attracted tourists from all over the

AND ONE last word on fashion. Ilana Margalit, well-known as a fashion-show compere in Israel and abroad, has left the bright lights of Tel Aviv to settle in Ashdod, where she has opened a modeling school. The number of beautiful Russian immigrants with star potential is incredible, says Margalit, noting that two of her pupils recently scored well in a national beauty contest.

NATIVE ENGLISH speakers who attended any of the lectures given last week by Lord Archer of Weston-Super-Mare, better known to the world as best-selling author Jeffrey Archer, are still raving about how marvelous he was. Another British-born celebrity who would have been delighted to be a member of any audience he addressed was actress Aviva Marks, who never got to hear him because she didn't know he was here. Famous though she might be, she is apparently not on the mailing lists of any of the British groups to whom he spoke.

AS FOR Archer himself, friendship is no less important to him than fame. Titillating though the British royal scandals may be, Archer is not about to write a book about the marital breakdowns in the House of Windsor. The reason: Princess Di is a personal friend, and he doesn't want to jeopardize the relationship.

ARRIVING THIS month on his first visit to Israel is Australian Jewish actor Henry Szeps, who is familiar to Israeli television audiences via productions such as Mother and Son, Macgregor's Saga and Palace of Dreams. In Mother and Son he plays a dentist, a role with which he has become so identified down under, that it provoked his new one-man show I'm Not a Dentist, which will get an Israeli airing on September 26 at the Herzliya home of Australian ambassador Peter Rogers and his wife Sandy.

FORMER US ambassador Sam

Lewis, who served here during the Begin administration, will participate in a Camp David Revisited symposium at the Hebrew University's Truman Institute. The symposium, commemorating the 18th anniversary of the signing of the Camp David accords, will also be addressed by other players in the field such as former Egyptian ambassador to the US Abdel Raouf El-Reedy, Egyptian ambassador to Israel Mohammed Bassiouny, Simcha Dinitz (who was Israel's ambassador to the US at the time of the Camp David talks) and Meir Rosenne, who was at that time the Foreign Ministry's legal adviser. Curiously. President Weizman, who was also involved in the Camp David negotiations, is not listed as one of the speakers, nor is former US presi-

JERUSALEM-BASED mystic Yitzhak Kadouri, whose blessings on the head of Binyamin Netanyahu may have influenced the outcome of the May 29 elections, accepted the invitation of meat-processing mogul Mosbe Badash to affix the mezuza on his new Pikanti outlet in Petah Tikva. Badash, a master at marketing, ran full-page advertisements in the tabloids and had the cash registers jingling merrily for two hours prior to Kadouri's arrival. Hundreds of people who believe in the extraordinary powers of the mystic crowded into the store in the hope of receiving a blessing or at least catching a glimpse of him. When he finally arrived, he didn't stay long - but they did. And for Badash that was definitely a bless-

THE SECRET of long life, according to retired dentist Dr. James Neuman, who this week celebrated his 102nd birthday, is not to take anything to heart. A veteran of the German army with which he fought in the First World War, Neuman, who lives in a Kfar Shmaryahu retirement home, continued to practise dentistry up to age 78. He still frequents coffee houses, where in his three-piece suits he is a picture of sartorial splendor.

ALMOST AT the half-way mark to Neuman is entertainer Dudu Topaz, who is celebrating his birthday, and contemplating a career in politics. Well, there's not that much difference between a stage and a soap-box.

IT'S BEEN a great year for celebrity weddings, and Yael Abcassis and Lior Miller, literally the model couple, just made it in time. They tied the knot last night, on the final day of the Jewish year.

ANYONE wondered what Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani was doing at the gala 75th anniversary dinner of the Israel Manufacturers Association, the answer is simple.

He used to be the commanding officer of IMA chairman Dan Propper when the two were in the army. Labor MK Ehud Barak, who was also at the dinner but not scated at the VIP table, was heard to remark that one of the goals he's set himself is to return Kahalani to the Labor ranks.

Shohat defends Labor's record

DAVID HARRIS

IN 1994, the Labor government did not stray from the path of fiscal consolidation, former finance minister Avraham Shohat said yesterday, defending his record following the critical report of the economy published by the International Monetary Fund on Wednesday.

The report suggested the country's current economic crisis was caused by the "expansionary fiscal policy during the last two years."

"I don't want to enter a row with the IMF," said Shohat. However, he stressed he disagreed with the IMF analysis. "The problems were not caused by spending, but a failure in the ability to collect revenue."

Shohat pointed to the total deficit as a percentage of GNP, as proof of his success. "In 1992 we inherited a deficit which was 6.2 percent of GNP. By 1994, it was down to 2%, and while it rose in 1995 and 1996, it was still half of the 1992 figure."

The prime minister acknowledged the manufacturers' concern over the sector's drop in earnings, which the industrialists attribute to the 19% lag in the adjustment of the foreign currency rate and the rise in interest rates. During the next few days, Netanyahu intends to meet with Bank of Israel Governor Jacob Frenkel and

Finance Minister Dan Meridor to discuss the "timing of the budget restraint and interest restraint in order to encourage growth, and especially export growth."

"The problem of interest rates will be corrected by coordinating fiscal restraint and lowering of interest rates: a correction in exchange rates will automatically come after these two actions, said Netanyahu.

relations GREER FAY CASHMAN

PREEMPTING the fifth anniversary celebrations of the forging of diplomatic ties between China and Israel, billionaire industrialist Shoul Eisenberg and former ambassador to China Zev Suffot on Wednesday launched the Council for the Promotion of China-Israel Relations.

The time is ripe, said Eisenberg, to create understanding between the people of Israel and the people of China "in every possible field, not just in business."

Eisenberg, whose personal associations with China span more than half a century, recalled that he had first fled to that country in 1941 "as a German Jew without papers.

"It was a refuge for many Jews escaping the Nazis," he said. It was a very emotional experi-the patron of the council, of which Eisenberg and Sufott are chairman and deputy chairman respectively, and Labor Party chairman Shimon Peres is the council's honorary president.

Herzog observed that "we are establishing economic relations with what will be the greatest economic power in the world in the near fuitme."

Both Eisenberg and Sufott made special mention of Chinese Ambassador Wang Ching Yi, who was one of the architects of China-Israel relations, and who secretly came to Israel to help create the framework for diplomatic exchanges.

Teva, Tadiran lead shares up

TEL AVIV STOCK MARKET

ROBERT DANIEL

SHARES rose yesterday, led by Teva Pharmaceutical Industries, which got US clearance to market a drug, and Tadiran Ltd., a subsidiary of which won a contract to supply equipment to Bezeq.
"It's a stock story today," said

Eran Goren, portfolio manager at Zannex securities in Tel Aviv. The August Consumer Price Index is due out tomorrow, and investors are expecting a rise of 0.5 percent or 0.6%, he said.

The Two-Sided Index advanced 1.51% to 189.59, preliminary figures showed, while the Maof Index climbed 1.5% to

Teva was the most active issue, up 6% on NIS 3.5 million worth of shares traded.

Teva's shares surged after the. US Food and Drug Administration cleared the company to market Clonazepam, a drug to treat seizures. The drug is a generic version of Roche Holding AG's.

Iraq fears hike oil, FTSE closes at record

WORLD MARKET ROUNDUP

LONDON (Reuter) - Talk of possible US attacks on Iraq pushed world oil prices to post Gulf War peaks yesterday, while London's FTSE Index closed at a . record high on the back of a strong Wall Street.

On the foreign exchanges, the dollar staged a late revival against the mark on German rate comments and also firmed on the yen. Leading European shares closed higher after US prices data stealth bombers were heading for the Gulf pushed oil prices higher. At one point the October Brent contract, which expires on Friday, had gained 81 cents to $24.39 a barrel - its highest level since January 1991 after Iraq invaded Kuwait in 1990 and pushed Brent prices to $40.95. By 1600 GMT Brent had fallen back sharply from the day's highs to around $23.75 as traders took profits from the week's $2 hike in that Baghdad might mount an assault against Kuwait after the Kuwaitis agreed to serve as a base for an expected US military strike

On the foreign exchange front the dollar managed to claw itsway back above 1.51 marks in afternoon trading but lacked the incentive to reclaim the near-two mouth high of 1.5155 hit on Wednesday.

It firmed on the mark after a Bundesbank council member said he saw more room for Germany to cut key interest rates.

Klaus-Dieter Kuehbacher, L president of the regional central bank of Berlin and Brandenburg, said rates, including the 2.50-percent discount rate, could fall more if economic conditions permitted.

In Frankfurt, German shares ended a lively post-bourse session just one point off their record tion fears, firm German debt and the strong dollar.

Dealers were bullish, saying the market could break records today. The DAX Index closed up 3.52 at 2,570.32. In post-bourse trade the IBIS-DAX index rose to 2,588.04.

Wall Street's strength also boosted French stocks, which finished sharply up, with a shove from bank stocks after strong first-half results and a healthy oil share performance.

The blue-chip CAC-40 Index Prices peaked on market fears ended 27.31 points, or 1.34% up.

Dow approaches new highs

WALL STREET REPORT

NEW YORK (AP) - The Dow Jones industrial average flirted with new highs yesterday as the latest inflation figures eased worries the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates sharply to slow the economy.

Other stock averages also advanced, with some moving back toward record levels for the first time since the spring.

The Dow added about 17 points, surrendering much of the day's gains in the last half hour to close about 6 points shy of its best finish at 5,778.00, set May 22. Earlier in the afternoon, the Dow rose nearly 40 points, moving within 2 points of its all-time high of 5,796.10, which came during May 23's session.

Stocks drew a lift from rising bond prices, which were helped by news that wholesale prices fell last month, excluding the volatile food and energy components. Higher inflation can make the fixed-payoff on bonds less attractive, forcing down prices to improve the yield.

As bond prices rose, the yield. on the 30-year Treasury bond -akey determinant of corporate and consumer borrowing costs - fellto 7.07 percent. Without food and energy, the Producer Price Index fell 0.1%, the Labor Department said yes-. terday morning. Overall, produc-er prices rose 0.3% in August.

The indication of benign inflation reinforced speculation that. the Federal Reserve will either leave interest rates unchanged or institute only a quarter-point in-crease at the central bank's policy meeting on September 24.

The Fed will also need to consider today's data on last month's trend in retail prices, but there was little market concern because those figures usually fall in line with the wholesale prices report, analysts said.

(Continued from Page 9) You say settlements should keep pace with natural growth, but natural growth in the country is about 2%-3%, not 50% over four years. Do you plan to add 50,000 settlers into the territories over the next four years as you suggested July in Washington? Natural and otherwise ... I don't want to specify, whether we are dealing in numbers or percentages or any other thing. I think the important thing is policy. We haven't stipulated a number. We've stipulated principles, and the principles are that we're not going to limit the flow, the growth of population in these settlements. We haven't decided yet. We reserve the right to build new settlements; we haven't decided anything concrete on this matter.

EU and Orient House

Is it fair to say that the leading European foreign ministers, "the troika," would not be wel-come to meet with you here if they visit the Orient House?

That's fair to say ... They are welcome in Israel, we would like to see them in Israel, but I think that it's also fair to say that we very much value their call to honor agreements. Since they ask us to honor our end of the agreement, I think they should not take part in encouraging the Palestinian Authority to violate their part in not having any govemmental institutions

Jerusalem. So if they come to Orient House, there's no meeting with the prime minister?

I'd rather say that I hope that they don't come to the Orient House. I'd much rather have an affable and productive meeting with them.

Syria

Can you just repeat what you said in the cabinet today, that Yitzhak Rabin made a conditional promise to the US to pullback on the Golan to the June 4, 1967 lines if he was satisfied with security arrangements and normalization?

It only was a hypothetical agreement based on the assumption that the Syrians would live up to a whole array of conditions that they have not lived up to. It was also given to the US and not to the Syrians. It didn't involve a written document or a contract, and it is commonly understood in international law and in common sense that a hypothetical position aired in the course of negotiations, not consummated and not formalized in any agreement and given to a ument that you would obligate the next government, and indeed, it doesn't obligate.

The May 1995 "non-paper" on principles of security arrangements is unsigned. Is that binding on this government?

Same thing. It is not a binding document, and I don't think it can be viewed as such by any standpoint of international law.

Anwar Sadat went to war in 1973 not because he thought he could win, but because he wanted to break the political stalemate. Do you think Syria might do the same thing and make a political calculation to go to war, even if such a confrontation is military unwinnable?

That would be a very grave mistake. I think Syria has an interest in peace and stability as much as we do, at least as much we do. And I think any such action on the part of Syria would be precipitous and unwise, and certainly not in the interest of Syria and certainly not in the interest of peace.

Is "Lebanon First" still alive, given the Arab reaction? It's alive, exactly as it was when I presented it. I never presented it as a precondition for Syria's entering the talks. On the contrary, I said there are no preconditions. But you can be sure that once we begin negotiations, I will raise my suggestion about resolving the issue in Lebanon alongside Syria's suggestion on other parts. They don't have to accept my position on Lebanon any more than I have to accept their position on the Golan ... This year our principal task is to move ahead in the negotiations for peace with the Palestinians and with the Syrians, if they show signs of genuinely wanting to negotiate.

Domestic Issues

You speak of the separation of powers, which exists in the US. But the US has the critical notion of judicial review, which enables the courts to nullify legislation as unconstitutional. It seems the heart of the issue of the courts is whether you favor judicial review?

Well, I think that it's one of the major issues. I think that Israel is coming of age. And certain problems that were either swept under the rug or did not come to the forefront of the national agenda have arisen. In fact, we cannot sweep it aside.

Maybe, it's a sign that we are approaching a state of growth and peace with at least some of our neighbors, and it's positive that we allow ourselves already to delve into these matters as a soci-

This debate is now prompted by the religious-secular divide, but I think that there are many other issues that could warrant such an examination. For example, the Arab-Jewish question, the question of the differential approach to Arab citizens and Jewish citizens, third party, is certainly not a doc- a very problematic issue, or the question of private property versus state's rights, and so on. I have not made up my mind yet. I have spoken to leading jurists. The main argument is between jurists, I want you to know.

NEWS

Do you favor judicial review? It's an area that I am looking into. If there's one are that I don't want to make snap judgments about, it's this area which goes at the fundamental question of governments and constitutions. But I don't question for a second the supremacy of law and the inviolatability and independence of our courts. In fact, I view with gravity any attempt to our threaten our judicial institutions, and our lawyers have instructed the police to act very firmly against it. You gave a recent interview in which you said that Margaret Thatcher had a Parliament that was much more supportive of economic reform than you have. I remember my interview with you during the campaign, when yon said that within 100 days, which is almost up, there will be a legal groundwork for privatizing 50 of 160 government com-

Within 100 days, I think most of the legal work will be finished ... We are going to seek to privatize as much as we can, and this government will privatize more than any other government has privatized before, a lot more.

Your voters largely came from the lower end of the socioeconomic strata. Can you, in a narrow government, do privatization and economic reform or do you need a unity government?

No. It's the lower echelons that will benefit most from privatization, because they pay the greater part of their income for goods and services that are made more expensive by the lack of competition and competitive environment. Privatization is supposed to be bad for the workers. Most of the workers are not involved in privatization. Most of the workers pay the price of cartels and monopolies and inefficient companies controlled by governments.

Secondly, we also intend to involve the workers, in equity schemes and other programs, in the privatization, so it's to their benefit as well. Privatization is good for everyone in the economy, and we intend to pursue it very aggressively.

Soon? Yes. In October-November, we shall embark on the first round of privatization. Most of the legal work is finished and we're ready to go ... We have a sequence, a plan to come with a round of privatization and have instructed attorneys to begin with it. This is our second main target. [First is] expanding the circle of peace while insisting on security. And second, liberalizing and

ing the Israeli economy. Happy New Year, Mr. Prime Minister.

Happy New Year.

ROSH HASHANA

(Continued from Page 1) homes and another 33% are planning to be with relatives. In fact, for the entire holiday period, lasting through Succot, which ends October 5, 64% of those surveyed said they had no vacation plans. A total of 8.4% said they intend to go abroad, compared to 5.9% last year, while 22.2% said they planned to take a vacation in Israel, a drop from 25.4% last

Rosh Hashana is marked tonight with a festive meal, featuring apples dipped in honey, to symbolize a sweet year. During the holiday, worshipers are expected to fill synagogues throughout the country.

Because tomorrow is Shabbat, the shofar will only be blown on Sunday. For the same reason, the traditional tashlich ceremony, in which worshipers visit a body of water and symbolically cast off the previous year's sins, is also to take place on Sunday. Shops and offices are to remain closed until Monday morning. Public transportation will also stop tonight and resume at the end of the holiday, on Sunday night. Rosh Hashana, which marks the beginning of the year 5757, is the beginning of the Ten Days of Penitence, culminating in Your Kippur. The Shabbat between Rosh Hashana and Yom Kippur is known as Shabbat Shuva, after the haftara ("Return - shuva ~ O Israel, unto the Lord," Hosea 14) read that day. The Shabbat is marked by sermons on repentance delivered by rabbis. Monday, the day after Rosh Hashana is Trom Gedalya, the Fast of Gedalya, commemorating the murder of Gedalya, the Jewish governor of Judea, appointed by the Babylonians. The day is not a public holiday. This year, a group of worshipers, organized by Meimad, is to hold a public service on the fast day at the site of the assassination of prime minister Yitzhak Rabin in Tel Aviv.

Police Inspector-General Assaf Hefetz called on the public to be on the lookout for suspicious activity over the holiday weekend, and not to hesitate to report such activity to the police. "We are doing everything possible to ensure security, and to prevent terror attacks," Hefetz said in a statement. "But there is no replacement for public alermess to help the police in its work."

Thousands of policemen will be on duty over the holiday weekend. The army and Civil Guard are to provide extra manpower to beef up internal security, as is normally done on Rosh Hashana and other holidays, spokesman said.

Police will have random checkpoints and numerous patrols across the country in an effort to prevent the infiltration of terrorists, the spokesman said. He stressed that the measures being taken this year are similar to those in past years, and no special alert had been called. Meanwhile, firefighters across the country have been put on alert because of the expected hot, dry weather, according to a statement released by the Fire and Rescue

Commission. "The Fire and Rescue Commission, together with the Israel Police, the Jewish National Fund, the Society for the Protection of Nature in Israel and the IDF, are on special alert to prevent arson and to put out fires in those regions designated as being at high risk," the statement

NAHMANI

(Continued from Page 1) Michael Ben-Yair. Eighteen months ago, in a 4-1 decision. the court ruled that Danny's right not to be a parent outweighed Ruti's right to motherhood. Ruti then asked for a second hearing before an expanded panel of justices, and, in another precedentsetting decision - there had never before been a second hearing on a case originally heard by more than three justices - the court agreed, citing the extreme importance of the issue.

Yesterday, an 11-justice panel overturned the earlier ruling, with seven justices saying the right to be a parent is more important than the right not to father children. Ruti said she had never really believed the court would reverse its decision, and therefore did not yet have a surrogate lined up. "I came here with a sense of calm - that I had finished this period [of my life], and was beginning a new life," she said. "Now, I need to rest and refuel a

"To everyone who stood by me during the struggle ... I want to say thank you from all my heart. You have given me the gift of my life," she added. "And to the court, I want to say one thing: I think you have succeeded in moving forward together with science and medicine. Together with me, you have in essence opened up a new way of getting pregnant, which will make many couples happy." Danny Nahmani was not in court yesterday, and refused to be interviewed. His lawyer, Diana Har-Even, seemed to express his feelings, however, when she left the courtroom with a stunned: "I don't believe it." "This is intervening in a man's most intimate affairs, his choice of whether or not to be a parent."

Har-Even said afterward. "This is an area I would rather the state not get involved in. It is hard for me to reconcile myself to this ruling, which is at bottom a moral decision rather than a legal one."

Gruber, however, disagreed. "I believe this verdict will enter the pantheon of [great] verdicts." he said. "[It is] a defense of the basic human rights of women and children, a sign that the ancient principles of honoring agreements and pursuing justice still apply today ... and [a statement that] the future, which is changing so rapidly, must be based solidly on the past - on the moral principles set down in the Torah. The verdict was enthusiastically received in many quarters, from Chief Rabbi Yisrael Lau, who praised it for pointing out the importance of the sanctity of human life, to the Israel Women's Network, which lauded it as a victory for women. (Story, Page 3)

"Due to the lack of symmetry between men and women regarding pregnancy - the fact that the woman bears the entire physical burden - she alone should determine whether or not to exercise her right to parenthood," said the IWN's legal adviser, attorney Rivka Meller-Olshitzky, though the court's decision established no such principle. "If continuation of the process of in vitro fertilization was in the husband's hands, this would give the husband absolute power and control over his wife.

This is the first time that Syria has flouted the agreement, and UNDOF, which monitors the zone, is preparing a report on the activities of the Syrian engineers. for UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali and members of the Security Council

Tensions between Israel and Syria have been increased over the past month by reports that Syria had tested long-range Scud missiles, facilitated the delivery of long-range Karyusha rockets to Hizbullah and moved iroops in Lebanon.

According to the report, "senior Israeli officers on the spot are not worried: They reckon that Syria is doing its share of saber-ranling and has no intention of launching a war."

eson comes

Please take a moment and think about three families in dire straits we want to tell you about and we ask you to try to put yourself in the place of these parents. Premature twins were born with serious problems in their spinal cords and with undeveloped internal organs. Their parents are desperate. Our finest surgeons have begun a series of operations to save their lives, and there is hope for them. Kupat Holim, however, does not cover the cost of the operations. Their parents are economizing as much as possible, saving every shekel they can, but they have committed themselves to huge loans and their mental state is also deteriorating. By now they are penniless and cannot pay for their children's treatment - the lives of the twins are in danger.

What will happen to a family of ten children, one of whom, Moshi, was born with an internal birth defect. The child has been is great pain for several years and now requires long-term hospitalization. The entire family is in a desperate state.

Consider the case of Rivid, whose father has been a teacher for many years at one of Jerusalem's famous yeshivot. Rivid is suffering from a serious illness and requires extremely expensive treatment every three days. Her father has no one to turn to tor help and is deeply in debt, and her mother no longer has the physical or mental strength to cope with the child's terrible suffering. Her parents have reached the end of their endurance and have taken too many loans. Immediate help is required to pay the medical costs to save Rivid's life.

To the above picture there is no need to add another word. These four children can be strong and healthy and live normal lives but only if they have the financial support they need. We cannot sit at the bedsides of these children and lessen their pain, and we cannot relieve their parents. But there is one thing we can do, and this is to heed the rabbis who have established a special fund to save the lives of the children.

The future of these children is in our hands - we will not abandon them. We appeal to you to open your heart and in this way receive health and success for yourself and your family and the realization that you have helped bring happiness and life to these children and their garents.

No other words are necessary.

Gordon, Daniel lead Jerusalem over Eilat

THE new year started much like last year for Hapoel Jerusalem last night at Malha. In his season debut, it was Jerusalem's Adi Gordon coming through in the last season, to lead his club to an 84-79 victory over Hapoel Eilat.

Eilat's first game of the season had a familiar ring to it for their fans as well - they earned another A for effort for a fine first half, in which they led at one point 22-8. But foul trouble that plagued Eilat's backcourt duo of Meir Tapiro and Amir Katz did them in down the stretch.

The new wrinkle for Jerusalem was the debut of former Maccabi Tel Aviv sixth man Motti Daniel. Daniel was an instant hit with the fans, leading all scorers with 20

More importantly, be provided a steadying presence and fantastic defense for coach Pini Gershon's club in the hotly contested game, which had a playoff intensity despite its being the curtain-raiser for both clubs...

Things didn't look very promising for Daniel and his teammates early on. Showing off their vaunted offensive firepower, Eilat took off at the opening whistle, racing down the court in waves and distributing the ball beautifully. Led by Tapiro - who had an awesome first half, in which he scored 14 points without missing a shot, including two three-pointers - the southerners got the ball inside to Joe Dawson when they wanted, or ARYEH DEAN COHEN whipped it outside for jumpers. Their defense in taners.

Jerusalem's offense was also sputtering. A series of early misses by Papi Turgeman and some other shots that just would not go down led to Jerusalem's scoring just six points in the first 6:30 of play. When Tapiro hit a gorgeous fade-away, his club led 30-19, and Eilat looked like they would live up to their preseason press clippings. But Gordon had other ideas.

Sneaking into the basket under bigger players or feeding his teammates, he and Daniel brought the club back within striking distance at halftime, 46-39. Jerusalem's new foreigner, Dan Bingheimer, had been having a rough night, with four turnovers in the first half, including a fumbled breakaway lay-up after a steal. But was Bingheimer who got Jerusalem rolling early in the second half, burying a three-pointer on the first play to pull Jerusalem within four. Billy Thompson followed with a jumper before Daniel tied it at 46, and in just 2:30, Eilat's lead was gone.

To their credit, they fought back. Eilat center James Forrest, a Georgia Tech grad, took advantage of Thompson's being forced to sit after committing his third foul, scoring a few nice baskets. Ari Rosenberg filled in ably for the foul-plagued Katz, and Dawson chipped in to give Eilat a

But Gordon - a perfect 9-9 from the line - would not be denied, nor would Daniel. With the aid of a more aggressive defense, Jerusalem hung in there until Daniel hit one of 3 three-pointers he had on the night to give Jerusalem a 67-64 lead with 8:30 left which it never relinquished.

As for Eilat, it was another frustrating loss for a team which always seems to have so much potential. Tapiro, a hero in the first half, was a goat in the second, especially after picking up his fifth foul of the game with an unneces-sary shoving of the much bigger Bingheimer to the floor in an attempt to get around a screen late in the game.

His absence hurt his club badly down the stretch and put a damper on what had been an outstanding evening for him.

For Jerusalem, Gordon had 19 points while Bingheimer, much improved in the second half, had 17 and nine rebounds, along with three steals. Eilat was led by Nanad Markovitch with 19, while Dawson had 15 and Forrest 14 and seven boards.

A-G: No reason to investigate Suissa

THERE are no grounds for a criminal investigation against Interior Minister Eli Suissa, Attorney-General Michael Ben-Yair decided yesterday.

Ben-Yair was ruling on a complaint by David Mir, who heads a company called Mekor which owned land in Jerusalem expropriated in 1991 for the Har Homa project. Mir has since fought the project bitterly.

On March 19, the Jerusalem District Court issued an injunction forbidding the regional planning and building committee, which was chaired at the time by Suissa, from approving the Har Homa plan. The committee approved the plan that same day, however, and Mir charged that it did so illegally, in violation of the court order. Furthermore, he claimed, Suissa falsified and destroyed evidence relating to this crime. However, a preliminary police inquiry revealed that the plan was approved before the court order arrived at the committee's offices, and the approval was therefore legal. No evidence was uncovered to support any of Mir's other charges. Therefore, there is no justification for a broader investigation, Ben-Yair said.

In other news, Ben-Yair formally asked the Knesset to lift Likud MK Ehud Olmert's parliamentary immunity, so he can stand trial on charges of aggravated fraud, falsifying corporate documents, tax code violations, and a violation of the Party Funding Law (making a million - from the government. false declaration to the state comptroller). The Knesset House Committee will begin discussing the request when the Knesset returns after the holidays.

All the charges relate to the Likud's 1988 election campaign, during which Olmert served as party treasurer. According to the draft indictment, Olmert told Yona Peled - one of the heads of a nonprofit organization raising funds for the party - to solicit money from businesses, and in exchange give them fictitious receipts indicating that the money was spent on advertising.

Olmert omitted this money from the report he later filed with State Comptroller Miriam Ben-Porat, thereby deceiving her into giving the party a clean bill of health for its finances. This enabled the Likud to receive the remainder of its campaign funding - NIS 2.148

Peled and eight others were con-victed of their share in the scam by the Tel Aviv District Court in March. No indictment was filed against Olmert before now because Ben-Yair was waiting to see the outcome of this trial.

Nurses plan strike on Monday

A STRIKE by the nurses in the public hospitals, scheduled to begin last Sunday but postponed due to a labor court arrangement, is on again. The nurses' union said the strike will start on Monday morning due to "foot-dragging" by the Health and Finance ministries.

A week ago, Tel Aviv Regional Labor Court Judge Sara Meiri was asked by the Health Ministry for restraining orders against the nursJUDY SIEGEL es, who are demanding an increase in nurses' job slots to cope with the growing number and needs of patients. But, after ministry representatives agreed to enter talks, the strike threat and the request for restraining orders were postponed.

Both sides agreed to enter serious talks to deal with hospital manpower problems and report back to the court yesterday. But union head Ilana Cohen charged that govern-ment representatives behaved "improperly and stubbornly," with the intention of "fooling the labor court and wasting time." Thus the union said it would strike at all public hospitals - those owned by the government, Kupat Holim Clait and voluntary organizations such as Hadassah and Shaare Zedek immediately after Rosh Hashana.
